The Coal Strike Over.

Just too late for us to report it in last week's issue, came the confirmation of the report that the operators and the striking miners had agreed to submit the matters in dispute to a commission, and that work would be resumed within a few days. As in 1900, the strikers were practically victorious, having, as the Toronto World puts it, "forced the coal barons to knuckle under;" but the knuckling under was no doubt the result of Governor Stone's declaration that, unless the operators succeeded, within the next six days, in mining sufficient coal to relieve the existing famine, he would "call a special session of the Pennsylvania Legislature to pass a law creating a State Coal Committee to seize the mines under the right of eminent domain, and proceed immediately with coal production until the public demand was adequately supplied." Hurrah for "eminent domain," whatever that is, for it appears to be the only thing that will bring the coal barons to reason. For the present the horrors of a fuel famine are averted; but how long they will stay averted is another question—perhaps only until next year. An American paper says:

"The strikes, riots and disturbances will never cease during the continuance of the private ownership system. They will lull here and there, but will break out in other places with increasing violence. This will continue until the people will have to take over the industries and operate them whether they want to or not. The social system has entered upon the last stage of existence. Society is breaking up gradually. The ideas that control the people are changing. Old thought is giving way to new. Labor will organize more compactly and so will capitalists. Being natural enemies, this must result in the battle of Armageddon, in open conflict, unless something is done in a legal way to remove capital from the few and place its control in the hands of the many. If the people are not taught how to vote to make this change, republican and democratic workingmen will strike against republican and democratic capitalists, and in some of these contests revolution will raise its ugly head, and the gloom that strikes raise will be as sunlight to the gloom of a class struggle. Socialists want to make the change peacefully by the ballot. Ignorance knows no force except physical force. Beware!"

If anything delays a recurrence, for any considerable time, of the coal strike, which is inevitable sooner or later, it will be the coal barons' fear that Governor Stone's threat may be carried out, and the mines seized and worked for the benefit of the people. They were so sure of their power to do as they pleased—so certain that they were masters of the situation—that it is evident that they had never heard of the law of "eminent domain," and when they did hear of it, and found out what it meant, they promptly and very sensibly lowered their tone and consented to have the dispute settled by a commission, all, or nearly all, of the members of which are to be appointed by President Roosevelt. But it is not likely that the men will get all they ask, and if they do, they will soon ask more, for such is human nature, and strikes will continue until the mines are taken by the Government and worked for the benefit of the whole people instead of for the enrichment of a few. That they ever became private property was a monstrous wrong, to which the recent strike has opened the eyes of those who have suffered from it, and "public ownership" has been discussed and advocated as it never was before. Our sympathies, from the day in May on which the men struck until now, has always been with the strikers, as, also, has been the sympathy of the general public. Some—but not many—hoped that the operators would win the fight, asserting that the "wage slaves" were sufficiently well paid and had no real grievances; but we think it may be laid down as an axiom that men who are well fed, well clad and well housed—that is, men who are fairly comfortable—never strike. That the Pennsylvania miners were insufficiently paid, and imposed upon in various ways, is, in our opinion, proved by what has been stated in the public prints by those who are in a position to know, and whose statements have not been successfully rebutted. Socialists maintain that every man is underpaid who does not get all he earns, or the full results of his labor, which, of course, is impossible under the present system of private ownership of the means of production and distribution. But, in the words of the old song, "there's a good time coming," and the twentieth century will see wonderful improvements in the conditions under which men live and move and have their being.

The Fenelon Show.

The Fenelon Agricultural Society's annual fall show was held in the driving park grounds on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, and public opinion appears to be divided as to whether it was worthy of commendation or the reverse. It is somewhat difficult to carry a lot of shows in your head, so as to be able to compare one with the other; but, to the best of our belief, it was fully up to the average of the past few years—better by a good deal than some—but not equal to the exhibitions we occasionally saw on the same grounds in the "good old times." The fact is, local shows are so eclipsed by the glories of those held in county towns, that interest in the former is growing less, and it is nothing unusual to see their total abolition advocated in print. The entries of horses and cattle, especially the latter, were quite numerous, and there were many fine animals among them; but there were not half as many sheep or pigs as can be seen on many a farm. There was a good show of poultry, but not quite equal to that of last year. We noticed no agricultural implements on the ground, but Mr. Thomas Robson showed a number of the handsome buggies and cutters for the sale of which he is the agent. The display in the hall, both upstairs and down, was very creditable, especially in the ladies' department, in which there were above the average number of exhibits, and many of them were of a high order of merit. Mr. J. H. Stanton, our village photographer, had, as usual, a fine display of views and portraits, which attracted a good deal of attention and were much admired. On the ground floor there was a fair show of grain, roots, vegetables, fruit, etc. etc., and many of the samples were exceptionally good. It is needless to say that the "speeding in the ring" was a great attraction, though, this year, it was nothing to brag of; and the judges' stand, which was blown down some time ago, lay in a heap upon the ground. We hoped to be able to publish the prize list this week, but the secretary of the society was too busy to send it in time for us to put it into type.

The Sidewalks.

Several of the sidewalks are becoming so dilapidated as to be positively dangerous, especially the one running eastward from Barr's corner on Francis street east, a defect in which caused a boy to fall and break his arm on the night of the 7th inst., which was dark and wet. We have several times complained of the condition of this particular sidewalk, over which we have to pass several times every day, and in which there are holes already quite big enough to take a child's foot, and rapidly growing larger. All the satisfaction we ever got was such as could be extracted from the information that there are other sidewalks in as great, or greater, need of repairs; and, if this be true, their condition is a disgrace to the corporation. What makes the one we have specified particularly dangerous is the fact that for part of its length it runs over a deep ravine or gully, and if one of its half rotten planks gave way under a man's foot, he would almost certainly go down the whole length of his leg, and probably be seriously injured. Now that our authorities have been thus publicly warned of the dangerous condition of the sidewalks, the corporation will be responsible if an accident should happen. The village isn't wallowing in wealth, but it can afford to keep the sidewalks in a safe condition.

NEW BUILDING.—Mr. Washington Northey is putting up a neat, brick-veneered two-story dwelling house, 24 x 27 feet, at the north side of his store on Colborne street. It is not yet decided who is to lay the bricks, and Mr. Northey says he hardly knows what the building will cost.

"SPUDS."—Owing to excessive rains in Ontario, no end of potatoes rotted in the ground, and, consequently, the demand is in excess of the supply. They are now a dollar a bushel at retail in Toronto, and eighty cents here at the Falls, and what the price will be a few months from now nobody can predict. In some parts of the States there was such an abundant crop of potatoes that they are worth only a few cents, and, under public ownership of the railways, they could be brought here for a few cents more; but the roads are owned by corporations, who will charge "all the traffic will bear," and—what are you going to do about it?
