England's Terrible Condition.

To read the utterances of the Tory press and Tory speakers touching the financial condition of affairs in England, one would imagine that the "tight little island" was on the verge of bankruptcy and that everything there was going to the dogs. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in his recent budget speech, however, stated some facts that show the utterances referred to to be pure rant and balderdash. The government supporters rail at the Reformers for what they are pleased to term "decrying the country," mistaking, as usual, criticism of the Government for criticism of the country, and taunt them for their alleged want of patriotism and loyalty. But they have been engaged in a nefarious traffic of misstatements and malignant misrepresentations regarding the financial position of the mother country.

Sir William Harcourt has stated that the output of the British ship building industry was 210,000 tons greater in 1894 than in 1893, and that it was the largest output in five years. He stated also that at present there was twice as much raw cotton imported for manufacture as there was twenty years ago, that cotton was now half the price it was then, but that wages were higher. He argued that a fall in prices affects the manufacturer more than the workman, and that the latter is more interested in the volume of trade. If more raw cotton were worked up the number of men employed would be greater. Sir William said:

"What has happened in the last twenty years has been this—that the laborer who works up the material gets a far larger share of the profits than in former days, and no doubt that is a gain to him, but a loss to the other partner, who gets a smaller share. The quantity of raw cotton imported in 1893 was 12,600,000 cwt.; in 1894 it was 15,965,000. The imports of raw wool in 1893 were 672,000,000, and in 1884 699,000,000. In 1893 the exports of cotton yarn were 206,000,000 pounds, in 1894 236,000,000 pounds, and the exports of cotton manufactures in 1893 were 57,700,000, and in 1894 57,000,000. So in both cases the values were larger, but the quantities of material were immensely larger."

The relative pauperism existing in Great Britain now and at the death of protection should afford interesting matter for the careful consideration of Canadian protectionists. Sir William Harcourt, dealing with the question, said that in 1851 the paupers comprised 4.57 of the population, and that now the percentage is only 2.4. Of children under 16 it was then 5; it is now 2.3. From the ages of 16 to 60 it was 1.4; it is now .5. In old age after 60 it was 21.5; it is now 13.7. In 1849 the mean adult pauperism was 31 per 1,000; it has now fallen to 7.7, but it never fell much below that figure until after 1871, when the fall in prices began. This has reference to the period since 1871. From 1849 to 1871 the fall was down to 7.7, but it has now fallen concurrently with the fall in prices to 2.4. No one will deny that England has keenly felt the world-wide financial depression, but the question is to what extent. While the trade of free trade England has increased that of protected Canada and the United States has fallen off many millions.—Belleville Ontario
