The Home Market.

People who do not like "free-trade theory," but want practical illustrations of the working of the N. P. in Canada, should read the speech of Mr. Bain of Wentworth. Mr. Bain gave the history of a cotton mill in the Town of Dundas, where he lives. It had been operated since 1859, and it had gradually grown up and developed with the country. In 1873 the proprietor died, and it was deemed necessary to enlarge the enterprise, and the people were appealed to to take stock in it. The stock was extended to $400,000; and this is the statement that was made as to the results of the operation of that cotton mill in previous years: "The mills, with their present capacity, are now earning upwards of 12½ per cent., or more than 8 per cent. upon the proposed capital of $400,000." That was in 1873, under a 15 and a 17½ per cent. tariff. The National Policy came into operation. The cotton mill has been closed for several years, the $400,000 capital has been dissipated, and not one dollar of it has been returned to the original investors. "To-day," said Mr. Bain, "the men who, on the faith of the National Policy and the edevelopment connected with it, invested their little savings in that town in building stores and providing for their future comfort have had to sell these at a sacrifice, and, in the majority of cases, have left the country to secure employment and earn a livelihood for themselves and their families."

The combine was ruinous to the small industries. One mill, after running four days in the week for three or four years, closed up altogether. In the census of 1891 mention is made of a cotton mill in a western town employing 180 hands and paying $42,000 a year in wages—$4 25 a week for each employee. Last year even that pittance was twice reduced. In the same town there is a winey mill that figures in the census of 1891 as employing 100 hands and paying in wages $20,000. "It has been standing idle, and is closed. The $20,000 is no longer paid, and the operatives are scattered to find a living as best they can. But this mill figures regularly in the returns of the industries that the National Policy has brought into existence."

Mr. Bain declared that it was difficult to find a town in western Ontario—and he knows the country thoroughly—where an industrial establishment would not be found lying idle, the whole capital invested lost, and the promoters either gone into some other line of business or acting as agents for combines. "The chimney will be standing there all right, the building will be there, but the operatives have gone; and the capital, where it is?" In Haldimand a gentleman was found doing a little business in a large brick building. It was the shell of a great N. P. industry in which $20,000 had been sunk. The income on the investment was $70, being the rent paid by the gentleman whose office occupied a corner of the building, and who must have felt

"Like one who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled, whose garlands
dead,
And all but him departed."

These deserted "hives of industry" are the real evidences of the working of the National Policy, though the defenders of that policy are now shifting their ground and trying to claim credit for exports of cheese and other results with which the N. P. has as much to do as it has to do with the size of hens' eggs. What becomes of the "home-market" theory? If the farmer of Wentworth or Haldimand finds that the little town which used to be his market has been depopulated by the destruction of its industries, what consolation is it to him to know that the combine which did the job is located in Canada? The wages of the workmen in the small industries were necessarily spent almost entirely in the town. But what guarantee is there that the inordinate profits of the combine will be spent even within the confines of the Dominion?—Globe.

Two men recently found in a Mississippi river sandbar the hulk of a wrecked steamer containing a hundred barrels of whisky. It had been ripening since before de wah, and was in fine fettle.

Bounties and protective tariffs appear alike powerless to sustain the ship-building industry of France against the competition of England. Out of fifty-six sea-going vessels registered at Bordeaux only twenty-two are of French construction.
