Chinese Missionary Outrages.

A Toronto lady living in Japan, writing about the Chinese outrages on missionaries, says: "We know that the common people are only the instruments in these riots, and that the instigator is often some high official. Instead of punishing this man or that man they pay some poor creature a few hundred taels, so that his family will be provided for, and this poor, poor mortal gives up his life, and we are blind enough to think that justice has been done—for of what value are the lives of these poor men when there are some 500,000,000 of them in their country?"

This view accords with that of a correspondent of the London Times, who says that the source of hostility is not popular, but official. The influence of western civilization is "an abomination in the eyes of the rulers of China, whose days would be counted were it ever to permeate the masses." Missionary work is virtually the only agency through which these masses can be brought under the influence of western civilization.

"The missionary alone goes into the byways as well as the highways, and whether he resides in a treaty port or in some remote Province, strives to live with and among and for the people. The life which he lives, whether it be the ascetic life of the Roman Catholic missionary or the family life of a Protestant missionary with wife and children, is in itself a standing reproach to the life of gross self-indulgence led by the average Mandarin. But in the eyes of the latter it becomes a public scandal when, in contrast to every vice of native rule, the foreign missionary in his daily dealings with the people of his district conveys a continuous object lesson of justice and kindness, of unselfishness and integrity."

This aspect of missionary work, the correspondent says, goads the official Chinaman into fury, and is the motive of the foul calumnies by which he plays upon popular passion and prejudice. The hold which the missionaries have acquired upon the people by their blameless lives must be weakened by spreading rumors of vices veiled under the appearance of virtues. "The Roman Catholic convent and the family hearth of the Protestant missionary are converted by the foul imagination of their traducers into dens of abominable vice." Unfortunately the dense ignorance of the masses makes it easy to delude them with these monstrous fabrications. As a sample of this ignorance it is only necessary to say that the vast majority of the people believe that in the recent war the Chinese gave the Japs a tremendous thrashing. Other circumstances assist the inventor of lies. The missionary is a mystery to the people. "That he should have left his far-off country only to bear into a strange land a message of peace and good-will amongst men is an idea so alien to the Chinese mind that it can never wholly grasp it." Even the medical services rendered by the missionaries are a source of suspicion. Medicine in China is largely regarded as a black art akin to sorcery. The Chinese medicine man makes up his so-called remedies of the most loathsome substances; so the people are told that the missionaries' cans of preserved milk are the boiled-down brains of Chinese children, and that the eyes and other parts of the human body are the most potent substances employed in the Christian pharmacopoeia.

If the correspondent is right in blaming the officials as the real sources of violence, the remedy is to punish the officials, not the poor, ignorant instruments by which they work. Moreover, he would apply very strictly the rule of responsibility, making the highest official of every Province responsible for the acts of his subordinates, even where his only fault is ignorance of their transgressions.—Globe.

Chicago a Drunken City.

Chicago is manufacturing more drunkards than any other city in the world, says the People. It is a den of iniquity—the model of what high license can do for a town and her strong young men. Chicago consumes 13,000 barrels of beer alone every day. It is distributed in 17,331 different places—saloons, restaurants, hotels and clubs—or about one distributing place for every 100 inhabitants, including women and children. No other city in the United States consumes such a large quantity. The San Francisco district, which comes next to Chicago, has 10,543 places where beer is sold, and the New York district 10,312, both of them about 7,000 less than Chicago. For the months of June, July and August, 1894, the amount of beer sent out of Chicago breweries was 946,921 barrels, while for the corresponding period this year the amount was 1,026,070. The gain was 79,149 barrels, or an average of 880 a day. Nearly all of this was consumed in the city, besides an enormous amount of export beer and Milwaukee beer. In the amount of beer produced the Chicago district exceeds all others in the country, except the New York district. Each year about 50,000 arrests are made for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Let the patriotic nation come to the rescue and slay the dragon that is eating her heart.

The Shame of the South.

The Southern States, where human beings can be tortured as that wretched negro was tortured in Tennessee the other day, could not be further degraded by the encouragement of prize fighting within their borders. Tennessee is considered to be one of the most civilized of Southern States, although it might be easily that, and then not be unduly civilized. It was in Tennessee that the Methodist young people of the United States gathered this year, gathered in the Epworth League convention. The Methodists of Tennessee are certainly not responsible for this latest outrage. Yet the churches of the Southern States seem to be as thoroughly brutalized by friendship for lynch law as the saloons of the Southern States. The problem is difficult. The crimes which justify torture and death by mob law are not prevented by these excesses, and the superior race will have to show more respect for the lives of negroes before it can expect the negroes to regard either the life or the honor of the white race. There is no public opinion in the South hostile to this system, which places the frenzy of a mob on the throne of justice. The churches do nothing to uphold the sanctity of life. They have their share in the guilt, and delegates from the red-handed communities of the Southern States fraternize with their denominational brethren from communities where law is supreme and life is secure.—Telegram.

A Forty Pounder.

The two well-known sports, Messrs. Tom Diamond and Mike Normile, struck it rich at Hay Bay last Friday. They had been trolling in that famous fishing ground for some time, and Tom was pulling in the trolling line to come around, when a forty pound maskinonge hooked on to it, and the fun began. The big fellow made a plucky fight, but it was a losing battle, and after a long struggle he was lauded in the cockpit, captured and conquered. After catching a thirteen pounder to keep the big fellow company they started for Napanee, arriving here on Saturday evening. On their way home they stopped at the Royal, where the big fellow was much admired and the lucky fishermen congratulated on their good fortune. We believe this is the largest maskinonge that has been caught in the bay this year.—Napanee Express.

Petrified in a Year and a Half.

While working in the cemetery John G. Watson had occasion to remove the coffin containing the remains of the late Joseph Chuck, who, it will be remembered, died suddenly about a year and a half ago. When making an effort to raise the coffin to the surface Mr. Watson and his men discovered that something unusual had taken place, the weight being so great that they were unable to remove the remains without the use of the derrick. This means proved effective, and afterwards, upon examination, they were more or less startled by the discovery that the body had become petrified, and weighed in the coffin not less than 1,000 pounds.—Araprior Watchman.
