Against War Talk.

Principal Grant, in the current issue of The Week, replies to a writer in the previous number who contends that inevitable destiny is leading Britain and the United States to "a life-and-death struggle." The Principal enters a vigorous protest against this view:—

"War between the British Empire and the United States! Whoever among us utters a word to invite so stupendous a saturnalia of folly and crime, let him be—I utter the word solemnly—Anathema! All would suffer, but Canada would suffer most of all. She could not be conquered, but she could easily be overwhelmed for a time. She could not be held, thanks to the spirit of her sons, thanks to her union with Great Britain, and thanks, too, to the conscience of the American people, who would—on the first opportunity given to them—hurl from power the political party that was guilty of so deadly a sin against all the hopes of the future."

Dr. Grant admits the possibility of an American political party betraying the country into a war with Britain before the sober sense of the American people had time to assert itself, but says that there is no possibility of war on the side of Britain or on the side of Canada, because in both countries the Executive is dependent on Parliament, and Parliament would promptly vote out of power any Government that was suspected of taking the first step to overt war. "This being so, our interests, our dignity and our Christianity all alike demand that the provocation shall never come from us. Whatever others say or do, we must keep our senses."

The Week rejoins, laying stress on Dr. Grant's admission that an American political party might betray the country into war, and asking why our neighbors are building ships of war and letting contracts for gun-boats on the lakes. We do not like to dignify the contingency of war with the United States with such a phrase as manifest destiny. If it comes, it will be due to criminal stupidity, badness of heart and softness of head on one side or the other. Are the sensible and sound-hearted people on both sides of the line to sigh, and say to one another, "Good friends, we have no wish to fight, but we are afraid we shall be forced into it by our stupid and criminal classes"? Rather ought they to unite and say: "Our interests are common; the jingo is our common enemy." The best American journals are fighting on this line. The New York Herald recently said: "England, after all, is England, whether in British Guiana or on the China seas. Her policy is directed by the same ideas and same men. And blood is thicker than water, and our kin across the sea are closer to us than any Tartars or Romanoffs can ever be. So far as the relations of England and the United States are concerned, nothing but good has come of this last incident." Harper's Weekly, under the title, "Mouthing Jingoism," says:—"There has been a good deal of noise in the country of late, of which no sensible American can be proud. This country does not long to fight Great Britain or any other power. Not only has it no cause for a war with her, but there is absolutely nothing in the world's current history that indicates that we are likely to have a cause of war with her. It is true that her colonies on this continent are often uncomfortable neighbors, and that the Imperial Government does not treat us well when it sustains the offensive acts of the irresponsible colonies, but no cause of war has been given, and none is likely to be." Principal Grant's motto, "Delenda est—fudge," would be a good answer to war-talk on both sides of the line.—Globe.

Cared by a Copperhead.

Mr. Thomas Calvert, a dairyman of Portsmouth, O., was taking an afternoon nap on the sofa in his sitting room, from which he was awakened by a soft touch on his hand, which was hanging over the side of the sofa. He glanced down, and, to his horror, saw a thick, ugly snake which he at once recognized as the deadly copperhead. Its head was elevated, and seemingly caressing his hand. It would run its cold nose up and down the fingers, causing a sensation which brought the perspiration out in great beads on Calvert's forehead. Then it would dart its tongue out and lick the hand like a dog. Mr. Calvert was paralyzed by fear, and lay for what seemed to be hours, fearing almost to breathe, lest the deadly creature should stick its fangs into the hand which it seemed now to caress with so loving a touch. As Mr. Calvert was devising some escape from his horrible situation, his fox terrier Gyp appeared in the door. Long practice has made Gyp only second to St. Patrick as a snake exterminator. He seized the copperhead by the middle and shook the life out of him.

Outwitted by an Indian.

A good story is told of a machine agent within a thousand miles of here, who sold a binder to one of the children of the soil, whose name is not Peter Eagle, and took the dusky citizen's note a year after date. When the note became due the agent applied for payment, and the wily son of the forest told the agent to meet him in Cobourg on a certain Tuesday and the money would be forthcoming. On the Tuesday our friends met at the county seat and went into a hotel "to see a man," as is the custom in "Sleepy Hollow." The Indian treated, and the agent, not to be outdone, also treated, and over their toddy they talked about the weather, crops, etc. When the Indian had drunk the liquor furnished by the machine agent, he quietly said, "Hand over that note! You have furnished an Indian whisky—$100 fine—hand over that note." The agent wilted and gave Mr. Indian the note and went home a wiser if not a better man.—Port Hope Guide.

A School on Wheels.

A travelling man in the Philadelphia Record tells of a most peculiar school in Kentucky which is built on wheels. "When night comes," he says, "a pair of mules pull it to the home of the trustee, and the next morning it is drawn back to its daytime location. The mules go and come on schedule time, and if the school is a little slow about dismissing in the afternoon the whole outfit is apt to be given a free ride. A day's supply of wood and water is put aboard by the trustees every morning before the schoolhouse sets out upon its journey. The teacher boards with the trustee and needs no carriage. At night a bulldog is chained beneath the little frame building, and a bad man, armed with a Winchester, sleeps inside of it. All of this came about because someone threatened to burn the schoolhouse. Why the trustee does not have the building located in his own yard and save the trouble of hauling it back and forth I do not know, unless it is to comply with some legal technicality."

Rather a Peculiar Accident.

One day last week the seventeen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Rowan, Buckingham, Quebec, was leading a horse to water when she met with a sudden death. It appears there was a very long halter-shank on the halter, and as the girl walked along she threw the strap over one of her shoulders across her breast to the opposite hand. The horse is supposed to have reared suddenly, and, as stated before, the strap being across her breast, it is probable that it caught under her chin so unexpectedly and sharply that it dislocated her neck. When picked up by her father life was quite extinct.—Penetanguishene Herald.
