LITTLE AND OFTEN FILLS THE PURSE.

Do you want to buy a home with the money you now pay for rent? So long as the masses of the people do not save anything out of their earnings, just so long will their spendings go into the hands of those who do save, and they are the capitalists. This is why the few own the houses and the many pay the rent.

Senator Fry's Attack.

In the course of Senator Fry's speech on the Armenian outrages in the American Senate the other day, he said:—"I do not love Great Britain particularly, and could not give my assent to the marvellous eulogium upon Great Britain delivered here the day before yesterday. I say that from the time this country was peopled by Englishmen down to the day I am talking, Great Britain has never done one single kindly act to the United States—(applause in the gallery)—or to her colony—not one. I say that she has availed herself of every single opportunity that came to her power to hurt the United States, and to harm the country when it was a colony of Great Britain. I say that while Great Britain had been for half a century taunting us on our "Flag of Freedom" and our declaration of independence, with holding slaves and putting manacles upon their feet and hands, taunting us year after year, and asking what our declaration of independence meant, the moment the south revolted and undertook to set up a confederacy, the corner-stone of which was slavery forever and forever, Great Britain forgot all at once all her sentiments against slavery, and immediately did everything in her power to help France in Mexico and to help the confederacy to destroy the Government of the United States, for no earthly reason except, if the confederacy met with success, England would have in her a commercial customer. I admit the greatness of Great Britain, I admit she is the greatest power on earth, and the most magnificent power ever seen in the history of the world on the ocean, but I do not admit she is a friend of the United States, or that she has ever exhibited the slightest sign of friendship for us. And now she is sitting quietly by for a solid year and seeing those Armenians massacred because they are Christians, while she was one of the very agencies agreeing to protect their rights, or to compel Turkey to do it, and while she had the power in her hands any day to do it. So I say, Mr. President, regard less of what Great Britain might have thought, if I had had my way I would have memorialized Russia to take possession of Armenia at once, and would have declared that the United States would back her in the doing of it. So far as American citizens are concerned I would protect them at any cost. We never agreed that the Dardanelles should be closed to us. There cannot be found a line in the policy of the United States that ever permitted any great navigable body of water to be closed to us—not one. On the contrary, we have been ready to go to war at any time to keep navigable waters open to our ships. We have given no assent to the agreement of European nations that the Dardanelles should be closed; and if it were necessary to protect American citizens and their property, I would order United States ships, in spite of forts, in spite of agreements, to sail up the Dardanelles, plant themselves before Constantinople, and demand that American citizens shall have the protection to which they are entitled. (Applause) Mr. President, I think that one of the grandest things in the history of Great Britain is that she does protect her subjects, every where, anywhere and under all circumstances. I do not wonder that a British subject loves his country. This little incident with which you are all familiar is a marvellous illustration of the protection which Great Britain gives to her subjects: The king of Abyssinia took a British subject named Campbell about twenty years ago, carried him up to the fortress of Magdala, on the heights of a rocky mountain, and put him into a dungeon, without cause assigned. It took six months for Great Britain to find that out. Then Great Britain demanded his immediate release. King Theobald refused the release. In less than ten days after that refusal was received 10,000 English soldiers, including 5,000 Sepoys, were on board ships of war, and were sailing down the coast. When they reached the coast they disembarked, marched across that terrible country, a distance of 700 miles, under a burning sun, up the mountain, up to the very heights in front of the frowning dungeon; then gave battle, battered down the iron gates and the stone walls, reached down into the dungeon and lifted out of it that one British subject, King Theobald killing himself with his own pistol. They then carried him down the mountain, across the land, put him on a white-winged ship, and sped him to his home in safety. That cost

Great Britain twenty-five million dollars, and made General Napier Lord Napier of Magdala. That was a great thing for a great country to do—a country that has an eye that can see all across the ocean, all across the land, away up the mountain height and away down to the darksome dungeon, one subject of hers out of her 38,000,000 of people, and then has an arm strong enough and long enough to reach across the same ocean, across the same lands, up the same heights, down to the same dungeon, and then lift him out and carry him home to his own country and friends. In God's name who would not die for a country that will do that? Well, Mr. President, our country will do it, and our country ought to do it; and all that I ask in this concurrent resolution of ours is that our country shall model itself after Great Britain in this one thing. The life of an American citizen must be protected wherever he may be, whether in Great Britain or Turkey. (Loud applause in the gallery.)

A Lesson in Insurance.

Before another week has elapsed Toronto will in all probability have seen the last of the Hyams twins. For more than a year these two unfortunate young men have occupied the attention of the courts and the public mind to an unusual degree. The first trial on the charge of murder was one of continental interest. The amount of money which was obtained from the insurance companies in payment of the policies on Willie Wells' life was considerable, the speed with which it was dissipated was remarkable, and the charge of murder set up by the Crown was sensational in the extreme. These were factors that went to make the case one of the most remarkable in the criminal annals of Canada. Failing to secure conviction on the charge of murder after two trials, the prisoners had to face the charge of conspiring to defraud the insurance companies, conspiracy to murder Mrs. Harry Hyams, charges of forgery, and finally fraud, or false pretences. But on none of these charges have the young men been convicted, and now their counsel undertakes, in the consideration of their being allowed to go on suspended sentence, that they will leave the country and never return. It is not difficult to believe that the twins will be as glad to get away from Toronto as Toronto will be to lose them. The strain they must have undergone since their incarceration was enough to have killed any man who had not a strong will and a sound constitution. The effect of the trial and the determined way in which it was prosecuted have been of incalculable benefit to the life insurance companies. Without discussing the guilt or innocence of the Hyams brothers, it must be patent to any person that upon those contemplating a similar crime, the recent experiences of the brothers would have a strong deterrent influence. There is room also for an improvement in methods and the management of life companies that would minimize the temptation to commit murder for insurance. Agents who issue thirty thousand dollar policies to men unable to keep up two thousand dollar policies are almost accessories before the fact. It is very easily ascertained whether the applicant is in a position to pay the premiums, and when it is found that there is so great a disparity between the ability to pay and the obligation to be met there is good ground for suspicion that all is not right. The law has done a good turn for the insurance companies. It now devolves upon the insurance companies to do something for their own protection.—Toronto News.
