Flapdoodle.

It is only natural that after an election the members and organs of the defeated party should try to let themselves down as easily as possible, and try to prove that but for this, that and the other thing the result would have been very different from what it was. In the attempt a good deal of ingenuity is often exercised, and veracity is not unfrequently tampered with; but we doubt whether history affords a parallel to the gross misrepresentation and deliberate mendacity of which the Mail and Empire has been guilty since the 23rd of June. In a recent issue it said:

"The slump has taken place in Quebec. There have been changes in other provinces, but it is Quebec that has turned the scale. Had that province divided its representation half and half between parties the Conservatives would have had a fair majority to work upon. As it is the Liberal strength is drawn entirely from Quebec. The party indeed is a Quebec party. Two influences, of a very serious character, have been at work to contribute to the extraordinary result. One was the cry that was raised by the leader of the Opposition against a premier who was British and Protestant. The other was the demand for coercive legislation as regards Manitoba. The Remedial bill of last session was objected to by the Liberals of Quebec, Mr. Laurier at their head, not so much because it dealt with the school question, but because in dealing with that question coercion was not applied to the province as stiffly as the Liberals desired, or to the people with that energy that the Liberals seem to think necessary. The Liberal objection to it was, first, that it did not endow the separate schools with the money of the province; and, secondly, that it did not compel Roman Catholics to use such schools, whether they wished to or not. It has been represented in Quebec that an English and Protestant premier is indisposed to apply the lash, and that Mr. Laurier, a French Catholic and a Roman Catholic, would be more likely to do so. The view of the bishops has been that a moderate measure would meet the case. For this reason these dignitaries favored the Government project. The Liberals, however, declared themselves to be more Catholic than the bishops, and with a racial and religious cry, in imitation of that which Mercier raised, they have carried the people away."

The inference intended to be drawn from the above is that the compact between the Bishops and Tupper (believed in by everybody and resented by both Protestants and Catholics) was bogus and only meant to hide a genuine agreement between the Bishops and Mr. Laurier, but the Mail and Empire must surely think its readers are downright fools if it expects them to swallow any such flapdoodle. Will anybody credit the insinuation—so strong that it might as well have been an open assertion—that the mandement, the sermons against Laurier and the predictions of the parish priests as to what would happen to the members of their congregations who voted for Liberal candidates were all make-belief; or, rather, that they meant the direct opposite of what they appeared to mean? The tory organ must have been desperately hard up for something to say when it decided upon the course it is now following; but the absurdity and untruthfulness of its statements are so self-evident that they can deceive none but a few of the most ignorant and bigoted of those who look to it for information.

Probable Protests.

When a general election results, as the last one did, in a great victory for one of the contending parties, there is not as much likelihood of protests as when the winning of two or three seats may turn the balance of power; but it is the bounden duty of all opponents of bribery and corruption to protest against such practices as were undoubtedly resorted to in Winnipeg and North Victoria. Hugh John Macdonald's victory over Mr. Martin is said to have cost $100,000; how much Sam Hughes's victory cost we do not know, but it was undoubtedly a very large sum, and it of course came indirectly out of the pockets of the people. The now celebrated canal tickets, dozens of which have turned up, ought to be, of themselves, enough to void the election, but in addition, there is, we have every reason to believe, a great deal more than sufficient evidence to not only unseat Sam Hughes but to disqualify him also. The day after the election in Winnipeg the intention to protest it was announced, and that a protest will be entered in this constituency is almost absolutely certain. The Maiden Echo does not at all overstate the case in the following paragraph from last week's issue:

"The re-election of the present member for North Victoria could not have been accomplished by fair or straightforward means in the present election. Knowing this to be the case, every measure that could be devised by stratagem and fraud was brought to bear on the occasion; foundationless fabrications, trickery of all kinds, bribery of the most barefaced description and perjury were resorted to, under the wire-pulling of the professionals who swarmed all over the constituency. During the last few days of the campaign there were men busily employed throughout the riding wherever victims could be found, buying up votes for cash and promises of future advantages. The former commodity was paid on the nail, but the defeat of the government will prevent the realization of the latter—if they were ever intended to be redeemed, which we very much doubt; but we hope the courts will ventilate and punish both the authors and their henchmen for their nefarious conduct."

Barr's Latest Success.

The young gentleman alluded to in last Saturday's Globe is the second son of Mr. C. D. Barr, formerly proprietor of the Lindsay Post and now registrar of the county of Victoria:—

"It will be seen in the list of appointments to fellowships at the University of Toronto given in to day's Globe that Mr. A. F. Barr, B. A., the well-known captain of the Varsity Rugby team, has been awarded one of the Mackenzie fellowships in the department of political science. This appointment will be regarded by University men as well merited. Mr. Barr's success has not been confined to the field of athletics, though during his course he did more perhaps than any other man to spread the fame of the University in this connection. It was under him that the championship of Canada in Rugby football was secured, and his place on the lacrosse and hockey teams has always been a foremost one. It was the general excellence of his stand in the class lists that, more than anything else, won him the appointment. Throughout the whole of his under-graduate course, he held a high place in the honor list and received his degree this spring with first-class honors in the department in which the fellowship has been awarded. The University has done well to recognize in this manner the services and ability of one of her ablest graduates. As Mr. Barr intends to follow an academic career, the opportunity afforded him by his alma mater will doubtless be used to the fullest advantage."

Dreadfully Scalded.

Joseph Chabot, the night watchman in Mr. John A. Ellis's mill on the shore of Cameron lake, met with an exceedingly painful accident before daylight on the 16th ult.; but we heard no word of it until last week's Gazettes were all printed. It appears that Mr. Chabot and another Frenchman, named Sanpierre, took some liquor into the mill and imbibed so freely that probably neither of them knew very well what he was doing. The engine that drives the machinery is supplied with steam from two boilers, each of which is provided with a "blow off" pipe that passes in a downward direction through the rear wall of the boiler room for a distance of three or four feet and terminates about eighteen inches from the ground. Some time during the night Chabot told Sanpierre to blow off one of the boilers and said that he would go out and see that the pipe worked all right. He left the room, went around to the back of the building and either fell or laid down directly opposite the end of the pipe, receiving the full force of the discharge of steam that almost immediately followed. As Chabot had worked all day in the mill, his wife had gone there to enable him to sleep part of the night, and she and Sanpierre helped him home, and next morning Dr. Graham was sent for to attend him and found him so dreadfully injured that at first he almost despaired of saving his life. The whole of his right arm and side and the upper part of his leg were not only stripped of skin, but the flesh was so horribly scalded that the doctor has had to peel a great deal of it off to the depth of half an inch; but the patient is doing very much better than could have been expected, and will probably be able to work again in a very few weeks. The morning after the accident, while still somewhat under the influence of the liquor he had taken, he waved his arm about and said it didn't hurt him much, but he has since suffered so much that he told the doctor a few days ago he would never get drunk again in his life, and it is to be hoped that he will keep his word.
