The Tariff.

We are at liberty to announce that the tariff will not be revised during the short summer session of Parliament, but will remain unaltered until the early part of next year, the intervening period being occupied by a careful inquiry into the conditions of industry in all its branches, agriculture, manufacturing, etc. There are reasons in favor of as early a settlement as possible, but the rearrangement of the tariff on the lines proposed by Mr. Laurier is not a work that can be done by a Minister in his office at Ottawa. Every one whose interests are involved will say that it is only right that he ought to be consulted; and there are so many connections between one item and another that justice could hardly be done without a very thorough inquiry into the conditions and needs of industry of all kinds. This must necessarily cause some delay; but the inconvenience likely to be so caused is less than that which would result from hasty and ill-considered action. Mr. Laurier has been asked to declare his policy in order to put an end to the suspense which arises from the expectation of change. It is obvious that he cannot announce in advance the details of the changes. Such a course would be a wide departure from the usual practice, and, besides, in the present case, it would be anticipating the result of the inquiry. The utmost that can be done is to indicate the lines upon which reform will proceed. We may put out of the question the possibility of applying absolute free trade in Canada. We may also put out of the question the idea that the bringing of the tariff to a revenue basis means the destruction of "every vestige of protection." In all that was said and written during the campaign, in Sir Oriver Mowat's address, in Mr. Laurier's reply to Mr. Bertram, in the articles of the Globe and other Liberal journals, the necessity of cautious and considerate dealing was emphasized. It would have been both unwise and dishonest to take the opposite course; unwise because it would have needlessly alarmed business men, mechanics and others, who have interests bound up with the present system, and dishonest because it would have aroused in the breasts of free traders and advanced reformers hopes which would not be realized. The large popular vote polled for the Liberal candidates in the Ontario cities shows that the classes that were supposed to be most interested in the protective tariff had confidence in the assurance that the Liberal policy was to be of a constructive, not a destructive character. This does not mean, we should be sorry if it did mean, that the changes are to be trifling. It would be a foolish step to make an exhaustive inquiry into all the conditions of industry in this country, with the foregone conclusion that matters are to be left as they are. The tariff is full of abuses and irregularities. There are excessive duties. There are duties which levy tribute upon the great body of consumers for the purpose of making fortunes for a few. There are duties which lend themselves to the formation of rings, monopolies and combines. There are cases where a duty has been imposed upon representations that it would lead to the employment of large numbers of men, and where the amount of employment is really insignificant. There are duties upon raw material which seriously hamper the operations of great industries. In these and other respects there is room for very extensive improvements in the tariff. But it ought to be thoroughly understood that it is practical, substantial grievances of this kind that are aimed at. It is not in the public interest that fortunes should be made for favored individuals by taxes levied upon the community at large. It is in the public interest that there should be diversity of industry, that as many workmen as possible should be profitably employed, that business should be as little as possible disturbed. The tariff has become involved in the whole network of the industry and business of the country, and anything like rash, ill-considered change might injure persons who have never obtained or asked for any special advantages under its provisions. The inquiry that is promised ought to be full, thorough and impartial. It should not be confined to the protected interests; it should include farming, mining, lumbering, etc., as well as manufacturing industries. It should consider the interests of the consumer as well as that of the producer. It should seek to enlarge, not to narrow, the scope of opportunities for the employment of Canadian industry. We hope it will become the basis of a tariff under which confidence in Canadian enterprises will be strengthened and the country enter upon an era of increased prosperity.—Globe.

Are the Men Alive?

RESCUERS WORKING IN THE TWIN SHAFT SIGNAL THE ENTOMBED MEN AND GET AN ANSWER.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 5.—There is just a possibility that some of the men entombed in the twin shaft at Pittston may be taken out alive. The rescuing party who were at work from 10 o'clock last night until 4 this morning, on coming to the surface reported to Mine Foreman O'Brien that they heard rattling on the rails of the gangway road, which may have been caused by some of the entombed men. The rattlings were clear and distinct, as if some one had struck the rail with a hard substance. The supposed signal was answered by the rescuers in the same manner. After a short silence the answer came clear and distinct. The sound seemed to come from a point some 300 feet from where the rescuers were at work. When this news reached the surface there were only a few persons at the head of the shaft, but in a short time it was spread throughout the city of Pittston and at daybreak an immense crowd gathered, among them relatives and friends of the victims, in whose hearts hope had awakened. Further news from the pit was watched for up to 5 o'clock this evening, but beyond the fact that the rattlings were heard there were no further developments. At 7 o'clock to-night the rescuers report that in their opinion they are within 400 feet of the entombed men. The shifts have been increased from 20 men to 35, who are relieved every half hour. They are still cutting through the rock and progressing more rapidly than at any time heretofore since the work commenced.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 6.—The 11 o'clock shift this morning reported hearing rattlings, and every man came up feeling absolutely convinced that some of the victims of the disaster are alive. They not only heard rattlings, but answered them. Several of the men on the shift had managed to crawl over the debris about 110 feet from the face of the fall. Here they found an open space blocked by a mass of rock and coal, over which it is impossible to force a way. While they were examining the fall they were startled by hearing five distinct taps on the rail, two with a little interval between them and then three rapidly. Before they recovered from their astonishment the rattling had been repeated.

Indians Starved to Death.

QUEREC, July 4.—News has reached here from River Moisie, North Shore, to the effect that a whole family of Naskouapi Indians were starved to death some 15 days ago. A party of hunters from Moisie found the remains of seven persons some 200 miles in the interior. The remains were those of the Cleinaw family, father, mother and five children. The squaw had written a few notes in the Naskouapi tongue, which told of the terrible ordeal which the family had suffered since the fall of 1895. They started from Moisie with the largest fall of snow of the season, for the Hudson Bay hunting grounds. After having travelled about 200 miles, the provisions became short, and the whole family slowly starved to death. First the children died, and the head of the family followed. Still the squaw lived to tell the story. Her last note is dated March 14. When found this heroic woman was still in a sitting posture beside the remains of her husband. Of course decomposition was much advanced. The hunters buried the remains in the desert, leaving a mound of stones to mark the grave in the bush.

The bicycle craze is growing in Burlington Booth's army. So many volunteers have been vexed over the question whether or not it is proper to ride a wheel to meeting on Sunday that the commander, in the last issue of the Volunteer Gazette, writes: "It is all right to ride the bicycle on Sunday. It is better to work the pedals than to work the trainmen on the cars." A bicycle prayer corps, to make short flying trips, to out-of-the-way places, is now talked of. When salvation takes the wheel, sinners will have to take to the woods.
