There are plenty of proofs that the tastes of Queen Victoria are decidedly domestic, but none seems more convincing than that she is an enthusiastic chicken raiser. The royal aviary, as described by Artist Ernest M. Jessop, is a very elaborate affair.

The Queen has her head "chicken man," who is aided by a large corps of experienced assistants. For forty years the royal poultry pens were under female supervision. Mrs. D'Albertanson, now in charge of the Queen's room at the kennels, being supervisor. A man named Hammond has succeeded her. He knows all about chickens, their value and their artful ways.

Many breeds are kept in the royal avlary-gold and silver spangled Hamburgs, gold and silver pencilled and black ones beside. Black, white and speckled Dorkings strut about in company with proud American Plymouth Rocks, black Minorcas, white Leghorns, Andalusians, white Rocks and Houdans. American Plymouth rocks are by the way, among the Queen's favorites.

The bantams, as usual, are the pride of the roost. One named Toby is as tame as a kitten. He is Hammond's toy. When the keeper claps his hands the midget runs to him, jumps upon his hand and chanticleers to his heart's delight. The chickens are let out daily in batches of the same breed for an hour's run on the grass. For breakfast they get soft food and for the evening meal they get an abundance of wheat. There is no hospital at the royal aviary. As soon as one of the birds appears to be ailing it is put to death and afterwards cremated.

The most formidable creatures in the lot are the wild turkeys imported from Canada, but now thoroughly naturalized. Two beautiful golden eagles are among the curiosities of the collection. One was captured thirty years ago in Windsor Forest. There are Aylesbury ducks, but not many. There are also golden pheasants and pigeons of various kinds.

An average of fifty eggs a day are

When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hear-ing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are cau-ed by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
