Better Days for Quebec.

There is reason to believe that the days of clerical terrorism are over in Quebec. Mgr. Merry del Val will learn a good deal from the result of the Quebec election, and as a sequel to his visit the mandement will no longer be numbered among the forces in Canadian politics. Bishops and priests of the Roman Catholic church will not be stripped of all political influence when they are no longer free to attach spiritual penalties to the exercise of a civil right.

Roman Catholics are fond of seeking to establish an analogy between the advice which Protestant ministers offer to their congregations and the orders which the hierarchy and clergy of the Roman Catholic church issue to the worshippers at their altars. There is more or less of a public sentiment against Protestant ministers acting as counsellors upon questions of earthly importance. There is a marked difference between the offering of advice from a pulpit, which hearers can either take or leave, and the issuing of a command from an altar which the worshippers disobey at their own extreme spiritual peril.

There is no ecclesiastical law by which a member of any Protestant denomination can suffer spiritual penalties by reason of any civil act not forbidden by the laws of his country. The same law which permits a Protestant minister to offer advice on civil questions permits a Protestant hearer to reject that advice. But the Roman Catholics in Manitoba and Quebec enjoy no such liberty. The church issued its commands and the machinery of the church enabled its officers to find out whether its commands had been obeyed at the polls. So long as a bishop spoke to his people as a friend to a friend, or a priest to his parishioners as a man to his men, there was no reason to complain. The bishops and priests of the Roman Catholic church did not deal in advice. They spoke with the authority of the sovereign to subjects who could not disobey without incurring the direst spiritual penalties. Canada is a land of free speech, and Roman Catholic priests or Protestant ministers will never be silenced. They may be free to offer advice, which may be judicious or injudicious, but as a result of recent events Roman Catholics may be enfranchised with the same right to reject advice from the altar which Protestants now enjoy of rejecting advice from the pulpit.

Linked With the Past.

Among the masses of reminiscences of the early Victorian period which the jubilee is bringing forth, an article on the Queen's bridesmaids discloses the fact that three of the twelve are still alive. One of these is Lord Rosebery's mother, and another the elder of the Dowager Duchess of Bedford, is a sister of Lord Sackville of unlamented memory. These were at first supposed to be the only survivors, but a third is discovered in the person of Lady Jane Bouvine, who, at that time, was the most beautiful of the lot, and as the daughter of the Earl of Randor, was a notable figure in society. But she married a commoner in 1847, and has been living in cheerful obscurity ever since. A curious kind of link with the past is furnished by a fac-simile of the first number of the Pall Mall Gazette, issued this week in commemoration of the fact that the paper has reached its ten thousandth number. The date is Feb. 7, 1865, and the leader is devoted to the Queen's seclusion, which is lamented, but is still excused on account of her position and her virtues. Even more interesting is a column letter by Anthony Trollope, strongly condemning the English tendency to side with the south in the American civil war, and asking to be allowed to print in this new paper from time to time his own arguments in favor of the north as a champion of liberty and education.

White Pine.

At the close of an article on the export of Canadian timber to the United States, the Montreal Witness says:— "Canada's exports of sawlogs to the United States have risen from less than half a million feet in 1888 to three hundred and seven million feet in 1896. During the same period our exports of sawn lumber to the United States have increased very little. It is said that there is less than ten years' supply of pine left in Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin at the present rate of cutting.

Now that the whole question of our timber trade with the United States is up, it would be well to discuss the question whether the time has not come for the framing of a new policy in regard to our forests; whether, for the protection of our national and provincial interests, not for the protection of individual interests, the cutting down of our pine forests should not be carried out under stricter regulations laid down by laws well enforced. White pine forests can be preserved in a constantly yielding condition under careful state supervision, as in Germany, but once destroyed, restoration is impossible. The end of the white pine industry is already within measurable distance in America. Canada's areas are among the greatest and richest still in existence. The whole question of their future should be well considered and a permanent policy laid down by the Provincial and Dominion Governments in council, after consultation with all the interests affected.

Cheap Degrees.

The business of giving titles of scholarship is getting to be a farce in America. It appears that all through the United States these honors may be received by nearly every one who has the dimes to put up. A contemporary supplies us with the following:—"We hear that the Kentucky school—the Normal something or other—of which we spoke a few weeks ago as selling its degrees, is actually offering to bestow them on the instalment plan. The charge for turning an untitled preacher into a Doctor of Divinity is fifteen dollars; for making him a Doctor of Laws it is twenty-five. Five dollars must be paid down, and five dollars each month thereafter until the whole of the balance is cancelled. Whether interest is added to deferred payments, we are not prepared to say, but we are informed that liberal commissions are granted to agents. Would it not be well to maintain a due proportion in the whole business by conferring the degrees a letter at a time? The Rev. John Smith, J., would then mean that the clergyman in question had handed over the first five dollars; L.L. would signify that he had sent a second cheque, and L.L.D. would show that the whole transaction had been closed."

A Martyr to Art.

Mr. James Brown, the genial wicket keeper of the post-office, took a macadam cast of his "phizzymahogany" on Sunday last. He had been north on a sixty or eighty mile run and was coming down Kice's hill into town at a 1.20 rate, when all of a sudden the wheel bucked and turned sixty-five somersaults. Meanwhile Brown had left it and was hurrying along in the direction of town. He first lit on his crown and spun round like a top for a few minutes. Then he turned a cartwheel or two, after which he cut a pigeon wing standing on his ear. Finally he took a great leap in the air and plunged forward, alighting on his face in the centre of the turnpike about fifteen rods from the spot where he dissolved partnership with the bike. A splendid cast of his face was taken in the macadam. The outline of his clear cut aquiline nose was brought out beautifully, also the Roman brow and prominent chin, the only defect being that in the hurry to take the cast mostly all the skin was wrested from Jim's face. He is thus at present a martyr to art, and is going around with his head in his grip, for the reason that it is scarcely presentable.—Whitby Chronicle.

The Cruel Turk.

The Athens correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says:—"M. Ralli, the Premier, showed me despatches and reports from Col. Mano, and other authorities in Epirus, showing that fourteen villages between Toulous and Kastroska have been burned by the Turks, after all the women and children had been massacred, except a few who hid in the fastnesses of the mountains. Zalangos, famous during the war of independence, and a few more who concealed themselves in marshes along the shore, finally managed to get aboard the Greek ships, half dead with hunger and fear. Not a stone of the village of Kamarina is left standing. The men fought like lions in defence of the women, who sought refuge in the woods and caves of Mount Zalangos, and, when chased by the Turks, jumped from the precipices to avoid capture and dishonor."
