EMPEROR WILLIAM AT HOME.

Economy in Some Departments and Extravagance in Others.

Not that the German Emperor would be commonplace anywhere. His mysterious outbursts of rage, his officially contradicted illness or illnesses, and his genius for self-advertisement would bring him into notice wherever he was. But though we hear so much about his love for show in public, few people know how simple his private life is. Yet it is a fact that a great deal of the solemn etiquette of the ordinary court life has been done away with, the staff reduced in several ways, and there have even been economies in the kitchen. The officers of the guard have to put up with beer instead of champagne. It is true the menu at the Emperor's table must be in German now, not French, but the aristocracy generally have not followed suit. There are things even a German Emperor cannot do.

But any one who sees the royal palace knows that the stories of extravagance are true. Restoring it was the work of three months, and everything that the best of science and art and the tax-payers money could do was done. Those three months turned out a palace that almost any other in the world. The apartments that the present Emperor uses, are those between the "Pillar Hall" and the "Star Hall," or "Star Chamber," whichever we would call it in English, only in this case the stars are in the ceiling. But perhaps the most magnificent is the front hall, the Treppen Halle, which faces the Palace Square. A view can be had without opening the doors, for they are each of one immense pane of glass, and even in the day-time the white and gray marble covering the walls is effective. At night it is a marvellous sight, the electric light flooding the hall, the marble balustrades, and the red carpet on the marble steps. You pass down these between colossal mirrors on either hand, and the Star Hall is directly in front. It is here the regimental colors are used as ornaments for the walls on a background of red damask. The panelling is done in rich rococo work.

The Emperor's and Empress's private apartments are near the Pillar Hall, which also faces the Palace Square. There is a private entrance and a public one for deputations and so on. One gets as good an idea of the general extravagance from the Emperor's workshop, or study, as anywhere else. True, there are the writing-tables, the leather-covered furniture, and the bookshelves, but the ceiling is in splendid white-and-gold rocoto work-done in Frederick the Great's time-and have been made in the same style and tolor. The walls are in dark olive and gold brocade. Here the inventions are made, pictures painted, dismissal of rabinets signed, and telegrams combosed. It will be an historic room. The Empresss private rooms are also very fine. Her reception-room has more of the immense mirrors, and the walls are panelled in greenish-gray marble. Yet she herself is the ordinary German Hausfrau, and is what she has been from her girlhood—a no-

All these apartments have been lying unused for many years since the time of Friedrich Wilhelm III., in fact. The court life in public resembles that of most other countries; the dinner is the most noticeable difference. It lasts barely three-quarters of an hour; courses come and go like lightning, and, as at Napoleon's table, a man who gives too much time to talking may find himself extremely hungry when it is over. One of the great entertainments is the time-honored ball at the end of the Carnival, where as many as twelve hundred guests have been invited. The waltz is the principal dance, and the minuet was lately introduced. The Emperor and Empress just join in one quadrille, but the ball is for them more of a big reception, they make their rounds of the guests in the "White Hall" before dancing begins.

It's a small thing, but when you think that most people drink it at each meal, and some people drink two or three cups each time, you can readily see it is most important that you drink pure tea. Very few know what happens from the time the tea leaf is picked until they buy it from their grocer, who as a rule, sells bulk tea. Few of them carry a sufficient stock of teas to blend successfully, and large importers, knowing this, and seeing the advantage of keeping the tea from exposure, have introduced the package One of the most successful of is Ludella Ceylon Tea, which seems to be thoroughly appreciated wherever used. A few years ago one dollar a pound; would not be as good a tea as 25c. Ludella. To a great extent this is accounted for by new methods of production; instead of rolling the leaf by hand, this is now done by machinery.

GIVE HIM A CHANCE.

A now famous physician relates that early in his career in the city where he was located, there resided an elderly physician who was always ready to give him wholesome advice. One morning the young practitioner was called to visit a man who was very sick. On his way he happened to meet his old friend, the doctor, and, as usual, he had something of importance to say. He drew it out so long, however, that the younger man grew impatient, and finally said, Doctor, you will have to excuse me; I am on my way to visit a gentleman who is said to be dangerous-

Oh, was the unexpected reply, give the man a chance; and the old fellow resumed the subject he was discuss-
