Force Them to Pay.

The vast majority of men in the Klondike are United Statesers, many of them of a not particularly law-abiding class. They enjoy the advantages of an expensive Canadian mail service and the protection of the Canadian law, which is administered at heavy cost. The Canadian Government is compelled to furnish an efficient administration, largely for foreigners, who will take out the gold and carry it away to spend in a rival country. For all this the foreigners pay no local taxes and contribute only a small license fee, customs duty and royalty. But to this latter they are bitterly opposed; wherever possible they cheat the Government out of it, and now they are raising a mighty howl for its abolition, and are trying to assist their case by wild, unfounded charges against officials. If the royalty is abolished the hard-working people of the rest of Canada will be saddled with the whole expense of administration. This the people of eastern Canada are not prepared to pay for the benefit of a lot of foreigners who are engaged carrying gold out of the country, and the sooner the adventurers learn it the better. The gold in the Yukon in reality belongs to the whole people, but the next best thing, when the public treasury cannot get it all, is to compel the men who are seizing it to pay the expense of government for the district. The royalty is a just tax. If a man gets no gold, he pays no royalty; if he gets the gold which belongs to the whole country he should pay a part of it into the public treasury in return for the protection given his life and his wealth. The Government cannot be too stiff in enforcing the payment of royalty.—Toronto Star.

The Prohibition Plebiscite.

The plebiscite campaign is supposed to be on, but it has not made itself visible to the average observer. The people have not felt the shock of battle, and unless something is done on one side or the other to stimulate popular interest in the question, the voting day will come and go and few people will know it. Outside the circles of persons who live by the liquor business on the one hand and of persons who are conscientiously devoted to the cause of prohibition on the other, there are few people who know just what the plebiscite is or just what is the question which is to be put to them at the polls. It is not the less true that the organizers on both sides of the question are alive to the fact that the minds of the people are already pretty well made up. The prohibitionists are able to define pretty accurately the limits of the vote which they can control, and the organization in the hands of the distillers, brewers and liquor sellers generally is possessed of a similar knowledge. This is a campaign wherein the intelligence of the individual is going to rank pretty high; from what we can gather from the campaigners on either hand, they seem to recognize the fact that the people at large know as much about the prohibition question as they can be told, or at least as much as they are willing to learn. It is true that arrangements have been made for a series of meetings throughout the country by the prohibitionists, but the announcement, so far as the general public is concerned, appears not to have awakened the slightest interest.—Ex.

A Politicians' Battle.

It may be pleasant for Mr. J. P.
Whitney to listen to friends who tell him to stay right on and fight the Constable bill until the snow falls. And Mr. Whitney ought to be his own most competent adviser in the choice of tactics, and he has not asked for the advice of journals which are unable to see how the Opposition is to improve its situation by futile obstruction. It would be a smashing blow to the Hardy Government if the Opposition could force an abandonment of the Constable bill; but obstruction can only succeed where there is an overwhelming popular desire for the defeat of the proposals, which are backed by a legislative majority. There may be an overwhelming popular desire for the defeat of the Constable bill, but the most conspicuous fact in sight at present is the overwhelming popular indifference to the whole struggle. People are losing neither their sleep nor their meals to follow the progress of the battle in the Queen's Park, and, outside of extreme partisans, there is no class which desires the disfranchisement of electors who have hitherto voted in accordance with the spirit, if not the letter, of the statute.—

Don't Buy When at the Fair.

A gentleman who knows whereof he speaks told us the other day the schemes the Toronto departmental and other stores work exhibition time. They always count on getting rid of their old and out-of-date goods. More particularly is this true of the dry goods men.
Tables and counters are piled full of old fossils and back dates and sold for almost anything they can get for them.
There are many people who think if they buy things in the city they are getting something new and cheap, and they almost invariably get left and bring home something that is not nearly as good as something they could have purchased at home for the same or even less money. Take our advice and leave your surplus cash at home; read our advertising columns and you will see you will profit by it in the end.—Ec.

Are They Becoming Extinct?

Either moths, beetles and kindred bugs are rapidly becoming extinct, or they are being educated to avoid electric lights, which, during the first years they shone, killed thousands of these insects. School boys have always been interested in bugs, perhaps from the fear they caused when alive, and in former days the young students had no difficulty in securing plenty of specimens for dissection or collections. They had simply to look around the base of an electric light which had been burning all night, and there were thousands of the foolish insects which had flown too near the light. Now the boys are complaining that specimens are hard to get. The electric light, to a large extent, has lost its fascination for bugs, and the question is, have the bugs learned better, or are they all dead? If the latter is true the electric lights have done a service for humanity for which they have not received due credit.—Ec.
