First Men in Klondike.

The steamer Roanoke arrived on August 30th from St. Michael, Alaska, with 459 passengers and gold dust which a conservative estimate places at one million and a half dollars. The bulk of it was the property of the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the North American Trading and Transporting Company. The amount consigned to the Canadian Bank of Commerce is $600,000. A majority of the passengers were men who went to Dawson in last year's rush. They have no gold, but lots of experience. The fortunate passengers numbered about 75. Of these probably 25 had over $10,000 each. The amounts held by the remaining 50 range from $100 to $5,000.
The following is a list of the richest ones and the amounts they brought back: M. W. Jenkins, $53,000; Theodore Anderson, $50,000; George Carmack, $35,000; Stick Jim, $35,000; Tagish Charley, $35,000; Ike Powers, $15,000; H. Doane, $15,000; F. Renaud, $15,000. These men were among the first who went to the Klondike.
George Carmack claims to be the discoverer of the Klondike. He located on the first claim on Bonanza Creek.
Stick Jim and Tagish Charley are full blooded Indians.

Conditions at Dawson and St. Michael have undergone no material change since last reports. People are arriving daily at St. Michael from up the river in small boats. The steamer Noyo, which left St. Michael two days before the Roanoke, relieved the congestion of stranded miners by taking away about 100 of them. The Roanoke brings news of the loss of the whaler Rosario last July while endeavoring to get out of the ice. P. B. Wear estimates the amount of gold dust and drafts brought down on the steamer Roanoke at four million dollars. The steamer Portland was to have sailed for San Francisco after the Roanoke left St. Michael. It was reported that she would carry a large amount of gold, the Canadian Bank of Commerce alone shipping over a million dollars.

Sparring for Time.

It is evident that the Czar's sudden change of attitude, seeing that it cannot well be sincere, is a ruse, and a ruse with a momentous object. Apparently, Nicholas, in calculating the inevitable, namely, a great war with Britain, has realized, while on the brink of a conflict, that the Russian Empire is not ready for it. Britain is, on the contrary, fully equipped, and ready for a prolonged struggle, and the growl of the Lion has already sounded in the ears of the Czar. In order to extricate himself from this dangerous predicament, it was necessary for Nicholas to assume a complete change of front, which, to be successful, must be accompanied by a "catch" policy, such as at this time one of peace would be. Hence the manifesto on which the statesmen of the world are speculating. But Nicholas has forgotten that example is better than precept. There is no sign of a diminishing activity in his war service. It is no idle surmise that while a conference of the powers would be quietly discussing the terms of a lasting peace, the arsenals and navy yards of the Russian Empire would be humming with activity. These things being so apparent, Britain will be excused if she neglects no opportunity to settle Russia's aspirations in the East once for all, even at the risk of being the first to cause bloodshed, in which position the Czar probably hopes to place her by his manifesto.—Toronto Star.

No Room for Topers.

The best temperance lesson ever preached is given in the annual report of the United States Commissioner of Labor. Mr. Wright has been at pains to ascertain the opinions of employers of labor as to the effects of the use of intoxicating liquor by workmen. Even the most ardent advocate of total abstinence will be surprised to find that of 7,025 establishments, employing 1,745,- 923 men, 5,363 employers reported that they took into consideration the habits of applicants for positions in regard to the use of intoxicating liquors. It was found that in some establishments no one using intoxicating liquors was employed. In other cases the prohibition applied to certain occupations only when on duty. In all more than one-half of the establishments reporting required in certain circumstances that employees shall not use intoxicating liquors. The fact brought out most clearly by the investigation is that employers are growing more and more to require strict sobriety from the men who do their work, realizing that only thus can good and faithful service be had. The time will soon come, if it has not already arrived, when the man who does not stay sober will be unable to secure any employment whatever.—Royal Templar Advocate.

France is Baffled.

France seems to be left high and dry by the Czar's proposal for a general disarmament. Russia has strength; France has wealth. The innumerable small capitalists of France have been financing every Russian scheme. Russia has been accumulating a great treasure of French money, and France has been accumulating an enormous wealth of Russian gratitude. France made Russia independent of the German and English money kings and expected to get her pay in the evil time when the weight of Russia's armies would be thrown in the scale against Germany.
The Russian alliance promised the return of Alsace and Lorraine to France, and the French have been whacking up money in order to hasten the fulfilment of that glorious dream. Russia has pocketed the money, and the Czar now coolly proposes an arrangement which cannot deprive Russia of the wealth extracted from France, but which must deprive France of the hope of revenge or justice for which all this money was exchanged.—Telegram.

It is computed that about 200,000 pedestrians and 20,000 vehicles cross London bridge every day. Each leaves behind a little shoe leather or a little iron, just a trifle. But when litter and dust are added to these minute losses, the whole fills between three and four cars. The most surprising fact of all, however, is, that the incessant traffic across the bridge reduces to powder about twenty-five cubic yards of granite every year.
