Tribal Customs in the Northern Caucasus.

The most stubborn facts to deal with are tribal customs. They are the accumulated and inherited habits of innumerable past generations, and are inwoven with the deepest conscientious convictions. To change such customs it is necessary to shange the entire nature of the tribe. The London Daily Telegraph gives an excellent example of the tenacity of tribal custom in the following account of the vendetta, practised in the Northern Caucasus. Nearly half the deaths in this region are due to the vendetta and three-fourths of these again are the result of a curious marriage custom. The young swain who discovers a maiden that strikes his fancy does not "pop the question," but hastens to get togather the money requisite to buy must pay from $175 to $1,000. But in case he can not raise such a sum tinues:

be gathered from a case in point which has just taken place in Sosslambek. Bokayeff is the bridegroom's name and Neshko that of the

who had the misfortune to find favor in his eyes. His pockets being empty, he persuaded three comrades to kidnap the maid, whom he then took took off to another village as his wife. But her father, on discovering here whereabouts, had her sent back by the police, and then demanded £30 for the loss of her services, as we should say. Bokayeff, to whom the demand was made, would not or could not pay. The girl's father thereupon claimed that sum from the bridegroom's companions, who are equally liable. They admitted the justice of his claim and called upon Bokayeff to hand over the sum to them. On his refusal they shot him dead, that being the custom of the country, although daggers are also allowed to take the place of bullets. The three youths were forthw,th arrested and will, of course, be tried and deported in due course. But that, far from being the end of the matter, is only the very beginning. The kindred of the slain man are now preparing to 'wipe out' the relations of the murderers, while the family of the dishonored girl is bound by the custom of the country to wash away the stain on her repuboth the murdered man and his And Russian law is powerless to intervene."

REASONS MAKE SALES.

A reason will sell an article where a broad unsubstantial claim will merely excite suspicion. The merchant with stock to sell should consider the points that will claim the attention of possible buyers and appeal to those who have ideas o goods and desire real worth. In selecting the theme for a good advertisement, stand strongly for character, for good sense and logic. reason makes the article valuable. The buyer will understand the good from the argument, and will appreciate the purchase the more after it is paid for, because of the good points cited by the one who wanted to sell the article. It is reason that makes sales and honesty in argument, that holds the reputation of the merchant. If strong points are marked by real honesty there will be no doubt of holding and building business. The more is this true because some merchants have adopted a plan of "yellow" campaigning for business. They have been making bold claims which the goods could not back up and the result is that people steer clear of them. If the reason is a good one and the argument is honest there will be no doubt of the advantage of such campaigning both in moral P. Fox, care Lackawanna Railroad, and financial profit. It is not reasonable to be unreasonable with arguments.

The Great Prairie Investment now. Company, Limited, advertisement appears in this issue. The investment is an unusually attractive one. The company have purchased four hundred and fifty acres in Winnipeg 243 deer and 730 chamois, besides at a low figure and are laying it out in lots. The advance in value since the purchase has been sufficient to make the investment safe and at the rate Winnipeg is growing large profits should certainly accrue. It should be worth while for anyone having some surplus funds for investment to obtain the prospectus o the company and look into the matter.-Dom. Med. Monthly.

TEACHING A DOG TO READ.

The intelligence of animals seems, as a rule, to be underrated rather then overrated. A dog beerder described the other day a wonderful collie that hald belonged to Sir John Lubbock. "This dog," he said, "would, when it was hungry, lay at her of her parents out and out. He its master's feet a card marked 'food.' When it was thirsty it would fetch a card marked 'drink. as this, he induces a few stalwart | When it wanted to take a walk it comrades to seize the maiden and would bring a card marked 'out. carry her off. The Telegraph con- | Sir John Lubbock trained it to do this trick in less than a month. He "What too often follows then may put the food card over the dog's food and made it bring the card to him before he would allow it to eat and in the matter of drinking and going out he used a like method. The cards were similar in shape and color; nothing but the writing on them differed. Since, therefore, the dog distinguished them by the writing alone, it may truly be said that the animal could read."
