The Gold Fetish.

It is no more to be expected that the great toiling masses can be thinkers than that the serfs of Russia or the lower caste of India can be thinkers. But there are hundreds of thousands who have had their mental faculties agitated and quickened, and from these will come thinkers. That they do not think is not a fault—it is a misfortune. But I was just meditating what would be the outcome if these millions of wage slaves could get a glimpse of the real character of gold and silver, and compare it with the insane, idiotic popular conception of these fetish gods? What would be the condition of that people or nation that had millions of tons of gold and silver, and had no houses, no clothing, no food and no machinery of industry? Poor beyond the conception of anything the world has ever had. Then, on the other hand, would that people and nation not be rich beyond anything the world has ever seen, if every citizen had a nice home, fine clothing, abundance of food and intellectual development, and no gold at all? If all the millions of people directly and indirectly engaged in increasing the amount of gold and silver were engaged in building more houses, making more and better clothing, more and better food, more and better instruction and entertainment—think how much better off the world would be. Gold is not wealth and never has been. It is the merest idiosyncrasy for men to spend their lives and energy in digging up a worthless yellow metal out of the mountains, and then having another set of men making granite and steel vaults to hold it, and not using it at all. If you will consider this view of the matter you will certainly see the absurdity of it. There is not a scientific student of political economy in any land who does not hold this view, and all express that view unless they are holding some position under the powers that profit off this credulity of the people.—Appeal to Reason.

THE HORSEMAN.

Every breeding animal requires exercise. This is especially true of the stallion.

When the mare is at work the colt should be kept in the barn or lot. It is better not to let it suckle until she has cooled off.

Watering the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night is a good practice.

If a horse is fidgety and nervous and lays back his ears while being harnessed, there is a reason for his conduct. It is more than likely that he has been frightened or abused by his former caretaker. Continual kindness will in most instances effect a cure.

Among the most important things in horse training is to cultivate a good disposition. It adds very much to the value and usefulness of a horse.

Does the collar fit perfectly? You know, a horse may be ruined by an ill fitting collar.

It matters little whether the horse is to be a trotter, a roadster or a draft horse, the treatment of the colt for the first year's feed is about the same. The best growth comes from the feed and care.

It is easier to keep a horse in shape than to make him well after he once succumbs to disease.

You can't harden a horse by making him endure hardship. The well bred, well kept horse is best.

Horses are classed as drafters when they weigh from 1,600 to 2,000 pounds; chunks, 1,300 to 1,500; expressers, about the same; carriage horses and roadsters, 1,000 to 1,200 pounds.

Do not teach the colts bad habits. What seems cute today may be vicious in a few months.

However good the pasture, colts will do better the second year if they have a small ration of grain. Some prefer oats, but corn alone has produced good

It matters not how beautiful a horse may be, if he is unsound in his feet he's a poor investment.

If the horses gnaw the stalls, paint the wood with tar. Paint the rest of the stable with whitewash.

Dosing Fowls.

Dosing fowls to keep them healthy is one of the surest ways to make them sick. It induces the very diseases and disorders the poultryman fears, suggests American Agriculturist. Good management obviates the practice of dosing. The most successful poultrymen do not fuss with or coddle their fowls.

WHAT SHALL I GIVE?

This is the question everyone is asking himself at present. It can be answered easily in many cases by a visit to my store, where

A WATCH, A CHAIN,
A FOB, A BROOCH,
A LOCKET, A NECKLACE,
A PIN, A RING,

or some other thing can be found to suit your requirements. Don't send to the city for these things until you see what you can get right here in town.
