HOW TO SAVE MONEY ON FOOTWEAR.

There are different ways of economising in footwear.

To buy cheap, badly made shoes
is not economy.

But to buy good shoes—high class shoes, is economy.

It is impossible to use high grade materials for cheap shoes and make money.

And it's also impossible to use the best machinery and employ the best workmen, because it wouldn't pay to do either. When you buy cheap shoes you buy cheap material and cheap workmanship.

But when you buy ARNOLD'S shoes you buy the highest grade shoes it's possible to make.

You buy the best materials obtainable, labor of the highest skilled workmen and the very latest and up-to-date methods for making high grade shoes.

Capitalists Unnecessary.

Capitalists are becoming unnecessary. Capitalism is its own grave digger.
In times past, in the beginning of the capitalist system of production, a man would work with his own hands, using his own tools. He would be nothing but an artisan. As custom came his way he would employ other men and work with them. He would now become a sort of foreman, and his increased income might be put down to his directing ability. Later on, he would buy machinery and appoint a foreman to do the work and keep an eye on the laborers. He would now work himself. Later on, as business increased and the business became better organized, he would employ a manager, while he himself would retire.
At this stage he becomes useless to the business, and his revenue is now derived from the ownership of the mill alone. His income may be still considered as a sort of old age pension, as a reward for good work done and his due. When he dies, however, and his heir inherits, the new owner becomes a dead weight on industry. He has never done a day's work in the mill.
All he does is to draw a large revenue and to spend it on himself.

Other mills have been built up in the same manner, and other heirs have inherited the title deeds to them.
These mills become consolidated; expenses are cut down, and the revenues going to the owners are correspondingly greater. Thus is created a rich idle class who live in luxury because they own the machinery of production at which men must labor. They do nothing useful. Their mills are run by salaried agents, and the commerce of the country goes on without their aid.

As industry becomes more and more settled and as better lines of commerce develop, still more and more men are thrown out of employment and into the class of the idle poor. The actual workers must work harder in order to hold their jobs, because the idle are clamoring for work at the gates of the factories. As the rich live on dividends and dividends depend on trade, the products of the mills must be sold for the rich to get their incomes. The poor cannot buy for lack of money, and so the rich are constantly threatened with reduced incomes. The whole system has become outworn and a new system must take its place.

The rich own the means of production, which they must often cause to cease working because the poor are too poor to buy. The poor need many things which they themselves could produce, did they but have a right to work in the factories. Under the present system, were the poor allowed to work in the factories to make goods for themselves, the rich would not be able to get their dividends, as the market would be cut from under them.

Thus the factory owner would keep their factories closed or limit the output, while the poor would go hungry and ragged and shelterless.

The only remedy is for the government to take over all the means of production and run them in the interests of all the people, without regard to dividends.—Cotton's Weekly.

If We Were n't So Blind.

Although Geo. M. Pullman has been dead a number of years and the heirs to his great fortune were imbeciles, the Pullman company has doubled its capacity since his death, and is now valued at double what it was at that time. This illustrates forcibly the fact that the captain of industry is no longer necessary in the business world.
Once a gigantic monopoly is established it runs on and on, irrespective of who is the nominal head. Rogers, who for so many years dominated and directed the great Standard Oil interests, died in New York a few days ago, and it did not cause a ripple on the financial sea. Standard Oil stock did not drop a penny in price. The work is carried on by the great army of skilled men, directed by competent foremen and superintendents, just as before. Some day society will wake up and discover that it can get along very well without paying such an enormous tribute to the men whose genius has built up the great corporations which now produce and distribute the wealth of this nation. The Appeal does not belittle the debt which society owes to such men as Rogers and Pullman; but it does not believe that society should be enslaved forever because of this debt, which has long since been cancelled. The trust to-day is merely a perfected machine. It is as such an invention as the linotype or the electric motor. Yet the government recognizes that it would not be just to society to give the inventors of the linotype and the electric motor a perpetual patent to the creations of their brains. Even the Chinese are wise enough to provide that, at the expiration of a certain number of years, the property of a railroad corporation shall pass into the hands of the government. If we were not so blind we could learn a valuable lesson from this practice of our Oriental brothers.—Appeal to Reason.

If there must be soup houses and bread lines, it is the idle who ought to be put on that kind of fare, and not the workers.

During the dark ages the serfs used to suffer the pangs of hunger in years when the crops failed; but during this enlightened age the "wage plugs" are in danger of starvation only when the world's market is fairly glutted with wealth. This sounds like fiction, but it is not.
