Exit Glass-Blower.

One by one the crafts of highly skilled workmen, like Othello, awake from a lethargic sleep, to find their occupation gone. What was once regarded by them as impossible is, as if by magic, suddenly changed into reality; and it is only when these startling changes come, threatening their means of existence, that these self-satisfied workers become active in the cause of labor. In this day of invention the skilled mechanic, the hand tool worker, is being rapidly displaced by the machine; and this wonderful piece of mechanism, geared to its highest capacity, has a productive power equal to that of six, eight or a dozen skilled workers.

The last of the highly skilled to be thus rudely awakened are the glass-bottle blowers. These workmen, skilled, highly paid—as compared with other labor—slumbered in calm content; except quadrennially, when they whooped 'em up for a high protective tariff and the g. o. p. Then they dozed off for another four years. But things have changed. The machine invaded the bottle-blowing domain. The blower, once the most prosperous and independent of wage workers, will soon walk the streets, with only his hands in his pockets.

The new invention, known as the Owens machine, not only blows bottles, but, equipped with a "sucker," gathers its own glass. Wonderfully delicate in mechanism, complex in construction, yet so simple of operation that an unskilled apprentice boy can do the work of six skilled blowers. Not only this, but this machine does, at a labor cost of six cents, what the manufacturer now pays the blower a dollar and twenty-eight cents for doing—a difference of $1.22 in favor of machine-blown bottles. This tremendous difference in the cost of production eliminates competition between the worker and the machine.

The patents covering the Owens machine are owned and controlled by the trust—the American Glass Co. These machines are not for sale, nor are they put out on royalty; instead, however, the trust erects its own plants and installs its own machines. This means that when the trust reaches a capacity sufficient to supply the demand for bottles, the independent manufacturers, those employing hand labor, will be forced to close their doors or go into bankruptcy. This is the condition which confronts the 10,000 glass blowers who will soon hit the cinder path in quest of jobs which are not to be found.

There are two roads—only two—open to these workers:

First, to support capitalism, as they have in the past, by giving their ballots to the republican and democratic parties, exploiters of the working class. This will insure them a permanent right of way on the cinder path.

Second, join the Socialist party, the party of their class; vote and work for the collective ownership of the means of life; become proprietors of their own jobs; receive the full value of their toil. Then it will be in no man's power to close the factory door in their faces, and put them in enforced idleness to starve, steal or become dependent upon bitter charity.

It's your move, Mr. Glass-blower! Which road will you take?—Appeal to Reason.

What is Slavery?

Herbert Spencer answered this question as follows:

"How much is he compelled to labor for other benefit than his own, and how much can he labor for his own benefit? The degree of slavery varies according to the ratio of that which he is forced to yield up and that which he is allowed to retain."

Under the prevailing capitalist system the wage slave is robbed without knowing it. He is paid his wage, and takes it for granted that he has received what is due him. Sad mistake! The wage he is paid represents but a small part of the value of his product; upon the average not twenty per cent. The capitalist employer takes a large part of the value created by each of the laborers in his employ. The wage workers are compelled to yield up the greater part of what they produce to their masters for the privilege of earning bread for their families.

THIS IS SLAVERY, the very essence of slavery, and it varies only in the ratio of the share the worker has to give to his master in the form of surplus value for the opportunity of securing a wage to keep starvation from his family.

All wage workers are slaves. Let this sink into their brains and it will not be hard for them to understand Socialism.—Ibid.

Breaking Up the Home.

A London press dispatch says that there is a brisk traffic in Italian children, in young girls and boys, who are sold by their starving parents and taken to seaport towns in Europe, where they are employed by a syndicate as beggars, getting only a small portion of what they solicit. They are ill fed and badly clothed, and if they do not bring in sufficient revenue to suit the padrones they are mercilessly beaten. Thus is the profit system breaking up the home and purposely degrading the children in the interest of profits.—Ex.
