Progress and Prices.

It takes one-sixteenth the time to make a pitchfork now that it did forty years ago.

It takes one-thirtieth the time to make a plow.

It takes one-sixth the time for a garden rake.

It takes one-fifth the time to make any kind of sacks.

It takes one-ninetieth the time to make paper bags.

It takes one-eighth the time to make blank ledgers.

It takes one-seventy-fifth the time to perforate bank cheques.

It takes one-two-thousandth the time to rule writing paper.

It takes one-tenth the time to make boots and shoes.

It takes one-fifth the time to make a wagon or buggy.

It takes one-fortieth the time to make a watch movement.

It takes one-tenth the time to make overalls.

And so on down the list of articles of necessity. And yet the prices are creeping up and up and up, while machinery is producing things cheaper and cheaper and cheaper. Under a co-operative system of industry, or Socialism, the time you would work to produce a thing would be the time you would work to get it. These articles would come to you for a continually decreasing amount of labor; while under the monopoly and profit system you have to work more and more hours to get the money to buy them. Every improvement in industry has a tendency now to throw you out of employment and to raise the price of articles. This is a logical and inevitable result of private ownership of the means of production and distribution. Under Socialism the prices of things would decrease in the exact ratio of improvement in ways of production. But the rich want to get richer, and, as they have the power to put the prices on what is produced in their privately-owned mills, factories and mines, they raise the prices to make more money to squander. And do you blame them? Why, do not you want to get more for your work, no matter how much you get? The capitalists and you are both acting from the same impulse. The capitalist has the upper hand of you, that's all, because he owns your job. Now, if you were as wise as the capitalist, you would see that you must own the jobs, so that you may get the benefit that goes to him by reason of his owning them. You vote for private ownership of the jobs because your masters have taught you that way. You have the votes to make laws taking the jobs out of the ownership of the capitalists, but you are too ignorant to use them. It is not because you have any scruples about such action, for you strike and starve and do lots of things against the owners of the jobs, and you would vote them out of the ownership, only that your ignorance blinds you to the cause of your small wages and the high prices of the things you buy. When you get wise, you will vote for Socialists who desire to make all jobs the common property of the workers of the world. Until that time you will be skinned by high prices and lowering wages. The capitalists are not to blame. You are the chaps that vote to keep things as they are.—Cotton's Weekly.

Why Wait For a Flood?

Word came from Paris that the municipal and national authorities impounded the food supplies when the flood cut off their further importation, and dealers started to charge exorbitant prices. The government decided that, in the face of a starving city, private property ceased to have the rights it so long enjoyed. When the flood drove great masses of people from their homes the same government took possession of all vacant houses, and, without permission from the owners, filled them with those who had been driven out by the flood. Much the same course was pursued in San Francisco during the earthquake, at Galveston when the flood came, and in other places suffering from terrible calamities.

Why should we wait for an earthquake or a flood to feed the hungry and house the homeless in disregard of private property. There are more hungry people to-day in America than in Paris. There are more homeless in this country than in Paris. To be sure, they are now scattered over a greater territory, and the cause of their suffering is less spectacular. These things make hunger no less painful, exposure no more endurable.

Why is a flood that raises prices any more of a calamity than a trust that does the same thing? Why is a system of landlordism that crowds the workers into foul slums any different from a flood that drives them out of those slums? Wherein is a writ of ejectment superior to a flowing river as a means of forcing a family into the street?

If it is a good thing to abolish private property temporarily, when it is starving a city in time of flood, why is it not better to abolish it when it is permanently starving a nation in a time of peace and quietness.—Chicago Daily Socialist.

The real joy ride is on the back of the worker.

Underneath his prejudice and ignorance, every man is a Socialist.
