

THE MYSTERY CLEARED UP;

OR, THE HERITAGE OF MADAME YALTA.

CHAPTER VI.—(Cont'd)

The dining-room was on the ground-floor, an elevated ground-floor, it is true, but the window was not more than ten feet from the ground. An adroit man might risk the leap, nor did it seem impossible to scale it. The valet leaned on the balcony, measuring with his eye the distance from top to bottom. The master, on the pavement, measured it from bottom to top. The men who guarded the door, and those placed against the wall, approached the colonel and formed a circle around him. The little troop disposed itself as if for assault. The man who held the horses brought forward the berlin and placed it under the window.

"They are about to invade the house," Maxime cried out; "two of them are climbing on the box; the carriage is to serve them for a ladder."

"Ah! verily," exclaimed Bidard, "that is too much. Right here, in the finest neighborhood in Paris, to have these brigands acting like they believed it was the forest of Bondy. I am going to give the alarm—if monsieur does not oppose it."

At this moment the cock-crowing sounded out still more clearly, accompanied by a rattling noise. A fustet voice cried out: "Cut-throat!" A base voice roared: "Scaling a wall—in the night—occupied house—band of malefactors—galley for life."

These words, taken from the penal code, had a prodigious effect. The two men hoisted on the top of the berlin were about to assist each other in climbing the window, where their companion was holding out his arms to them, when the menace, hurled by an invisible witness, made them hesitate. At the same moment was heard the opening of the casements to all windows of the house guarded by the porter Bidard.

"All my people are astir," he said, rubbing his hands; "the female tenant of the second floor, the druggist of the first, and now we shall have a play for nothing. The druggist raves like anything, and the female tenant dreams of murder every night."

"Ah! a thousand thunders!" vociferated a masculine voice, "what's all that? Robbers pillaging the house over there! Concierge, look for the police—the guard!"

"Murder! fire!" shrieked a female voice.

"Ah! rascals, wait awhile," resumed the man; "my revolver! where is my revolver?"

Maxime determined not to show himself, but to act according to the course Borisoff should take. He never lost sight of the boyard, who showed unmistakable signs of perplexity, even of fright. Evidently his attempt had failed, and nothing remained for him but to beat a retreat. He appeared, however, still to hesitate before decamping with his troops, and moved about uneasily, shaking his fist at the people who threatened him, resembling his subalterns, and gesticulating violently.

By his order, doubtless, one of the men on the box dismounted hastily, and the other took the whip and reins. The man who had entered the house with Robert de Carnoel jumped from the balcony to the berlin and thence to the sidewalk.

The defeat turned into a rout. At this moment a pistol was fired by the terrible tenant of the first floor. The effect was not deadly—no one fell—but the explosion gave the signal for the rout. Borisoff hustled his men into the carriage, where they crammed themselves with some difficulty, and jumped in after them. The driver struck out his horses in the direction of the Avenue de Villiers.

"They fly, the cowards!" exclaimed Bidard, willingly showing himself now that all danger was past. "They don't get off like that. Stop, sir, this is the moment to cry 'Come thief!' There's a station down there on the avenue. The soldiers will stop the carriage."

As he said this he precipitated himself into the street. Maxime made no effort to abate his ardor, and willingly followed.

He had little hope of capturing the berlin. Indeed, it was a small matter to him whether or not they captured Borisoff, but he was greatly concerned to know what had become of Robert de Carnoel, Madame Sergent, and the countess' fencing-master. They must be in the house, and he counted on the tenants to assist him in forcing them out of their nest.

Just as he put his feet outside the door the victoria arrived at full speed.

Auguste, the faithful coachman, attracted by the pistol-shot, was hastening to the assistance of his monsieur.

"Stop!" cried Maxime, and Auguste stopped short.

"Good!" said Bidard, "we will jump into the milord and follow after the brigands."

"If the brigands are in the berlin which fled away down yonder, it's no use to start my mare after them; she couldn't catch up with ten-thousand-franc horses. I heard a pistol-shot. Was it monsieur that fired it?"

"No, and no one was hurt. I believe it was fired in the air."

"Who is it undertakes to say I fired in the air?" cried a rough voice.

Turning, Maxime found himself face to face with a grotesque personage; a coarse, little old man enveloped in a dressing-gown, and armed with a cavalry revolver.

"I beg pardon, monsieur," said Maxime. "I thought you wished simply to give the alarm."

"No, sir; I aimed for the chief of the robbers, and am sure I touched him. If I'd had cartridges I would have killed them all, but unfortunately I had only one load."

"Fortunately, Papa Pincornet," said a young man who had just come out of the house; "if you had fired oftener you would have done mischief. I was at my window, just above you, with my friend Galopardin, and your ball passed right under our noses."

"Monsieur Falot, I have told you before that it doesn't suit me to joke with you."

"Upon my word it is true. Ask Galopardin."

"I swear it," replied the clerk who answered to this absurd name. "I swear it by the concierge and by this house; and here is Mlle. Saint Gres who will bear witness to having heard the hissing of this projectile."

Mlle. Saint Gres was a person of ripe years, of a spare figure, and a pimpled face; the female tenant of the second floor.

Maxime was not sorry to see all the tenants collected together.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have not the honor to be known to you, and since chance has led me to be present at a singular spectacle—"

"I beg pardon, monsieur, who are you?" asked the old druggist, gravely.

Maxime was wishing to send to the devil this ridiculous individual who assumed the airs of a magistrate interrogating a prisoner. But his situation was one in which he had need of everybody, and he did not disdain to conciliate the goodwill of Signor Pincornet.

"I entered," he said, "to make some inquiries of the concierge, when I saw arrive, in carriage and on foot, the bandits who have attempted to climb into that house. Naturally, I remained to give assistance to honest people. I am the nephew of M. Claude Dorgeres, banker."

"Good house, monsieur," said the bass voice of the old druggist. "House favorably known on change."

"Wait," said one of the young tenants of the third, "I know your uncle's cashier."

"Really?" asked Maxime, a little surprised.

"I was quite intimate with him before he was such a grandee. We ate in the same restaurant; soup, two dishes, half a bottle and dessert, thirty-six sous. His name is Jules Vignory. Galopardin knows him too."

"Yes," affirmed clerk number two, "would you like a description of him? Vignory (Jules), called the resier of the Upper Saone, because he was born at Vesoul and because

NA-DRU-CO

Formulae Have Been Well Tried Out

Though the NA-DRU-CO line of Medicinal and Toilet Preparations have been on sale for a few months only, don't think for minute that in buying NA-DRU-CO goods you are experimenting with new or untried preparations.

Their Origin

The twenty-one wholesale drug firms now united in the "National" had all of them lengthy careers, some for fifty to one hundred years, prior to the union. Each firm had acquired or developed a number of valuable formulae for medicinal and toilet preparations, all of which became the property of the "National".

Since the union our expert chemists have carefully gone over these formulae and selected the best for the NA-DRU-CO line. Every formula has been carefully studied by these experts, improved if possible, and then thoroughly tested again, in actual use, before we consider it good enough to bear the NA-DRU-CO Trade Mark.

An Example

A good example of what we mean is NA-DRU-CO Nervozone for Brain Fag or nervous break-down. The formula was pronounced the most scientific combination of nerve medicines, but this was enough for us; we had it tried out with a dozen different kind of Brain workers—School Teachers, Lawyers, Bookkeepers—as well as Society leaders and home workers, and everywhere the result was so good that we adopted it as one of the best of the NA-DRU-CO line.

There are therefore no experiments among NA-DRU-CO preparations. We have invested altogether too much time, work and money in the NA-DRU-CO line to take any chances of discrediting it with preparations that might not prove satisfactory. We make absolutely certain that each preparation is satisfactory before we endorse it with the NA-DRU-CO Trade Mark.

Ask your physician or your druggist about the firm behind NA-DRU-CO preparations and about the NA-DRU-CO line. They can tell you, for we will furnish them, on request, a full list of the ingredients in any NA-DRU-CO article.

"Money Back"

If by any chance you should not be entirely satisfied with any NA-DRU-CO article you try, return the unused portion to the druggist from whom you bought it and he will refund your money—willingly, too, because we return to him every cent he gives back to you.

If your druggist should not have the particular NA-DRU-CO article you ask for in stock he can get it for you within two days from our nearest wholesale branch.

he is virtuous, twenty-six years old, round chin, oval face—"

"I know the rest," said Maxime, laughing. "Vignory is my intimate friend, and I am pleased to meet two of his comrades. But suffer me to remind you that we all have a duty to fulfil, that of warning the occupants of that house that rogues have attempted to force an entrance."

"Not worth the trouble. The box is empty. The Prussian has gone home."

"His friends have come back, M'sieu Falot," said the porter. "For a quarter of an hour a woman and two men have been there, without counting the servants. If you hadn't stayed so long at Cafe Cardinet, you'd have seen 'em go in as we did—monsieur and me."

"And me, too," cried the coachman. "I wasn't so near, but I've a pair of good eyes. And the husband offered me a hundred sous to take him to his house. I'd lay my life on it, he's just murdered his wife."

"A murder! Ah, mon dieu!" groaned the female tenant.

"The tragedies of jealousy," sneered Galopardin. "It would be well to enter and search the house," said Maxime. "If a crime has been committed the victim has need of assistance perhaps."

"Enter! How? The doors are locked."

"By the window, then," said Falot. "Bidard must have a ladder; who hasn't?"

"What's a ladder for?" asked Auguste. "I'm going to put my carriage under the casement."

"Like the berlin a while ago? It's a good idea," said Maxime.

"Good!" cried Galopardin. "There is, perhaps, a corpse or two in there, and we are called upon to make a search. Falot and I will climb in with you. Bidard and Pincornet will guard the door, and Mlle. Saint Gres will pray for us."

This programme was laid off in so decided a tone that no one objected, and Auguste hastened to lead his horse by the bridle to the spot indicated. It was less adapted for the purpose than Borisoff's berlin, but the intrepid Falot found that by standing on tiptoe he could lay hold of the window with his hands, and Maxime, following the example of the two clerks, raised himself of the strength of his wrists and leaped the balcony after them. "We can't see a jot here," said Falot. "Wait, I have some matches in my pocket."

He struck a light which was sufficient to enable them to discern on a table a candelabra filled with wax candles, and in another minute the darkness gave place to an illumination.

It was, as Bidard had said, the dining-room. The cloth was laid on a table, in the middle of which was a chalice of old Saxony filled with rare flowers. But it did not appear that any guests had been seated at the table, and in the great empty hall the silence was profound.

"One might suppose it was the castle of the Sleeping Beauty of the woods," murmured Falot.

"Let us search," said Maxime. "First let us see what way this door leads—hold—it is locked on the outside."

"Let us begin by calling," exclaimed Falot, striking with his feet against the door.

"Hullo!"

No one answered to this appeal, but a murmur of voices in the street attracted the attention of the explorers. They hastened to the window and saw the tenants and porter in conference with two policemen, who had been attracted by the report of the pistol.

Maxime saw that the moment had come for his intervention. Together with the two clerks, he had in a few seconds joined the group, and was in a position to add his word to the somewhat confused conversation between the occupants of the house opposite and the guardians of the peace. He recounted briefly what had taken place, and so told his story as to lead the policemen to believe that a crime had in all probability been committed, and that it was imperative to search the house immediately.

All the doors were locked. The commissary of police alone had the right to have them opened, and one of the policemen went in search of him.
