Church Union

A perusal of the reports of the meetings of the representative Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational bodies that have lately been discussing church union, does not strengthen, if it does not positively weaken, the hope that union of the churches may become an accomplished fact in the near future. The leaders in the discussion of the subject at the Presbyterian General Assembly hold widely divergent views on the proposed basis of union, and did not hesitate to cast serious reflections upon each other's sincerity. A prominent delegate said at the recent Methodist conference that a man would be in danger of being sent to jail if he were to do in private business what the conference proposed to do regarding one point in the plan for union; and a Congregationalist describes the proposed basis of union as "too much creed by half and too much Presbyterianism by a whole." In such disagreements and such wide differences of opinion as these it is not easy to find indications of an early union of the denominations concerned.

There are a few church people—ministers as well as laymen—who think that church union is not desirable. On the other hand, there are many who regard the existing divisions as nothing less than criminal. The lack of volunteers for the mission field is being constantly deplored, while a union of the churches would liberate a great many men for work in other fields. The multiplicity of denominations not only acts as a hindrance to young men entering the ministry, but lessens the force of the appeal of those who do. The heathen is quite justified in telling them to go home and agree as to what Christianity is before asking other people to accept it. The waste of men, money and time, the bad effect of disunion upon the unconverted, and the vastness of the work yet to be done, are among the unanswerable arguments for a speedy uniting of the churches.

The New Walks.

The new cement walk from the canal to the Mansion House will be ready for traffic by Saturday, most of it being now in use. The last cement was laid yesterday at the Mansion House corner. The opposite side of the street is now being filled in with stone. The north side of Francis street between Colborne street and the G. T. R. track will also have a cement walk this summer, the property holders having petitioned the council to that effect, and a walk will be put down between the two bridges and on the west side of Colborne street from Francis to Bond. The east side from Francis to Bond will probably be included in the cement zone, but the matter is not yet definitely settled. This section certainly should be cement, when the rest is.

With stone so easily obtainable as it is at present, all the cement walk possible should be built this summer.

G. T. R. Station Alterations.

Alterations in the Grand Trunk station were commenced on Monday morning by company carpenters. From all the information obtainable, we can scarcely go any farther than to describe the changes to be made as alterations. Some of them may perhaps justly be called improvements; but making the two present waiting rooms into one general waiting room is a step backward. Something better than that was expected from the company. What should be done is to make the station at least twice the size it is now, with up-to-date conveniences. The public will not be satisfied with a little tinkering.
