Why I'm Not a Socialist.

Because my family have, for many generations, been staunch Liberals in politics, therefore I am too prejudiced to be anything else.

Because the Socialists believe in putting a stop to "dividing up," which would not suit me at all, as I would not be enabled to live in luxury and idleness off other people's labor.

Because, as the ethics of Socialism and Christianity are identical, I would not, as a professing Christian, care to see the teachings of Jesus applied practically to our industrial life, as such teachings were only intended in a figurative or theoretical sense—according to capitalistic logic.

Because Socialism would minimize, if not entirely destroy, the love of money, which is the root of all evil; consequently, ministers of the gospel would find it so easy to convert people to Christianity that many of them might work themselves out of employment, which would be a bad thing for the social life of a community.

I am not a Socialist because I believe wage-slavery is justifiable. How could we possibly support a parasite class without it? To remove the parasites from the laboring class would be very injurious to both. The former, not being self-sustaining, would weaken perceptibly if thrown on their own resources, and the latter, because labor has been so long accustomed to supporting a lot of blood-thirsty leeches, would not know how to expend their superfluous energy.

Because there will be no adulteration of foods under Socialism, and I believe a certain amount of adulteration is good for the digestion (of the profit mongers.) A fellow would have to drink his coffee without chicory, unless he procured the adulterant and mixed it to suit his taste, involving more trouble than buying the prepared article of to-day.

Then, again, there is grave fear that canned chicken would, under Socialism, be made from the feathered biped, instead of the new born offspring of the bovine species; that nutmegs would not be made from maple slabs; that mustard would be free from floor sweepings, etc. To have all these and other foods free from adulteration would be bad for business. Therefore I am opposed to Socialism.

I am not a Socialist, because I am amply supplied with plenty of this world's goods, and I do not give a cuss for the rest of humanity. Because I am a selfish, sordid, money grabber, and it matters not to me the moral and physical degradation I impose on innocent members of society, so long as I can pile up the dollars. I know that capitalism breeds such men as me; that success, as taught in the public schools, consists in getting rich or acquiring fame; that the church lays some emphasis on character building, but her attitude to economic questions of the day belie her doctrinal teachings, and most money cuts the widest swath in church circles as elsewhere.

Realizing these things, I stand for the capitalist system of production and distribution, believing that private ownership and monopoly of the necessities of life is O. K.; that misrepresentation in business is essential to success; that the meek shall inherit the earth (after they are dead;) that the race is to the swift and the battle to the strong, and let the weak go to the wall; that competition is the life of trade and co-operation is the death of it, and that property rights are of greater importance than the rights of human beings.

Our Military Burdens.

David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain, in his Mansion House speech before the bankers and merchants of the City of London, deplored the growing bill for armaments. In twenty years this account has risen from thirty to seventy million pounds per annum, or three hundred and fifty million dollars. According to Lloyd-George the countries of the world are spending $2,250,000,000 on machines of destruction. This enormous sum, which could be spent in housing the homeless, feeding the hungry and giving the children of the world a chance to live and grow strong, is spent on instruments of hate. The capitalist humanitarians see no way of abolishing this enormous waste. They sigh and vote for the adding of military burdens to military burdens. But the Socialists of the world are uncompromisingly opposed to military armaments. When the war lords are busy lashing the national passions of hate into fever heat, the international Socialists are busy exchanging fraternal greetings of love. On which side do you want to take your stand? With the capitalist ambassadors of hate, or the Socialist international brotherhood of Love?—Cotton's Weekly.

The movement for a workingmen's international anti-war organization is gaining ground so rapidly in England that it is being discussed not only by the labor leaders, but by the rank and file of the unionists as well.

Little tots, seemingly just from the cradle, are working day and night shifts in the Americanized cotton mills of Shanghai, China. Whole families toil from morning to night, as many from sunset to sunrise, for from four cents a day for the babies to twenty cents for the older hands.
