HAPPIEST MAN ON EARTH

The Zulu in the estate to which he is born and reared has been rightly said to be "the happiest man on God's earth," and although civilization is a blessed thing, it often seems altogether anomalous to attempt to apply it to the "native" or "Kaffir"—as he is commonly but erroneously termed. The Zulus, as a race, were, in the days of Chaka, Dingaan, and Cetewayo, an example to the world—aye, even to the staunchest Christian—in the morality of their living. They had to be, for the one and only alternative was death; and everybody knew and recognized this summary administration of an unwritten law. He who stole knew that he was risking his life.

FISH THAT WALKS

One of the strangest fishes in the world is the "goby," which can swim, but prefers to walk. Often it is seen climbing on the roots of mangroves in Florida, using its pectoral fins after the manner of legs. In the Philippines there is a fish called the "poyo," which spends a large part of its time out of water. In fact, it soon dies if prevented from leaving the water. Sometimes it climbs trees to a considerable height. Another fish of the Philippines, known as the "terebog," is fond of taking walks on land, and catches mice and even rats on occasions, devouring them with great relish. It attains a length of three feet.

AN OPEN-AIR BARBER

Paris, like Peking, has its ambulant barber. Armed with a little box, containing the necessary apparatus—razor, badger brush, soap, scissors, and serviette—he exercises his calling on the banks of the Seine. All the bargees, navvies and quay laborers are his clients. "Figaro" seats his patient on the pavement, covers his knees with a newspaper, and for a sou shaves, cuts his hair, and gives a human appearance to the tramps and others who entrust themselves to his care. But the wet season has not been favorable to the peripatetic barber, and with a sad countenance he avers that he has had a bad time.

MEAT FOR FOWLS

Hens eat meat, and any amount of it. Indeed, they must have this to keep them in good health. It makes them lay in winter. In other months they gather this quite readily in the form of insect life. Fresh lean meat from bones or as liver, etc., from the butcher's is the form to give them. Fatty tit-bits of any kind with meaty scraps of any sort should be given now and again. Green cut bone is another and very good form for this. Then skim milk if liberally fed to fowls will take the place for a time of meat. But it must be noted that this milk has only a tenth part of the meat properties, and consequently ten times more of it is required. Both meat and milk may be given with every advantage.
