

ORIENTAL FANATICS

A Peculiar Man Who Was Venerated as a Saint

In many parts of the Orient a lunatic has always been revered as one who is much nearer God than any sane person. During the Crimean war a Mohammedan religionist from Bagdad joined the Turkish army as a ghazi, or warrior for religion. He was a man of rare mental gifts and immense learning. Yet bare-headed and bare-footed, with scanty clothing, his sword girded about his lean loins, this fanatic marched through snow and ice at the head of his division, or led the way into the thickest of the fights. Five times a day, when he said his prayers, he ungirt his sword. But save then, either by day or night, sleeping or waking, he never went unarmed. He was a scholar, thoroughly versed in Arabic and Persian literature. Even in his own house, though speaking to wife, children and friends, no other word but "All" ever passed his lips. If he wanted food or drink, if he begged or bought, his wants were expressed by "All." He would race up and down the streets of the city for a day, shrieking at the top of his voice, "All! All!" Everyone venerated this fanatic as a saint. The richest man in the city presented him with a magnificent horse, saddle and bridle. Vaulting into the saddle, as soon as he had received the gift, he galloped through the town shouting, "All! All!" Riding into the no'isy bazaar, he cried "All" with such strength of voice as to be heard clearly above the frightful din of the shouting buyers and pounding mechanics.

BORN WITH TEETH

Little French Canadian Stole a March on Mother Nature

Nature has honored an infant son born to the wife of Mr. Albert Bisafflon, a citizen of Montreal, in a remarkable manner. This infant, instead of appearing in this vale of tears with all his teething troubles to worry his early existence, disposed of part of them before arriving, for he was born with two neat, pearly little "toofles."

These teeth are located in the front of the lower portion of his masticatory apparatus.

The proud father has been exhibiting the prodigy to admiring friends ever since the discovery was made, and a great future is prophesied for the remarkable child.

Phyllis: "You are too extravagant!"
