"Well, sir, I hadn't the courage. Sometimes I thought I would; and then again I couldn't make up my mind to; and I got to hate Mr. Falck, and I hated him more because he behaved well about it; and I got into the way of spiting him and making the place disagreeable to him; and I hoped that he would leave. But he stuck to his post through it all; and I began to think it would be safer that I should leave, for I felt afraid of him somehow. So at Michaelmas I took this

Darnell, who was still pale and agitated, seized pen and paper, and wrote a few words of apology and a clear confession.

Roy watched him with some curiosity, wondering now that he had not suspected the man sooner. But as a matter of fact, Darnell had been perfectly self-possessed unti his guilt was discovered.

"I don't know how to thank you enough, sir, for your leniency," he said, when he had written, in as few words as possible, the statement of the facts.

"Well, just let the affair be a lesson to you," said Roy. "There is a great deal said about drunkenbelieve it is betting that is at the root of half of the evils of the day. Fortunately, things are now set straight as far as may be, yet remember that you have wronged and perhaps irrevocably injured a perfectly innocent man."

"I bitterly regret it, sir; I do, indeed!" said Darnell.

"I hope you do," said Roy; "I am sure you ought to."

And while Darnell still reiterated thanks and apologies, and abject regrets, Roy stalked out of the shop and made his way back to the station.

"To think that I believed in that cur, and doubted Falck!" he said to himself, with disgust. "And yet, could any one have seemed more respectable than Darnell, more thoroughly trustworthy. And how could I disbelieve the evidence that was so dead against Frithiof! Sigrid and Cecil trusted him, and I ought to have done so too, I suppose; but women seem to me to have a faculty for that sort of thing which we are quite without."

Then, after a time, he remember-you were once more out of debt how down; and it was just as well that he had the railway carriage to himdo what you could to make up for self, for he began to sing so jubilantly that the people in the next compartment took him for a schoolboy returning for his Christmas holidays.

It had been arranged that if he could catch the express from Plymouth he should meet his father at the shop, and arriving at Paddington at half past six, he sprung into a hansom and drove as quickly as possible to Regent Street.

Frithiof just glanced at him inquiringly as he passed through the shop. He wondered much what had passed at Plymouth, and when at last he had got rid of his customer, Roy returned to the shop with such evident excitement and triumph in his manner that old Foster thought he must be taking leave of his sen-

But visions of the past faded as Mr. Boniface grasped his hand. 'How can I ever apologize to you, Frithiof?" he said. "Roy has brought back a full confession from Darnell, and the mystery is entireness being the national sin, but I ly cleared up. "Here is Darnell's letter," said Roy, handing it to him. And Frithiof read it eagerly, and asked the details of his friend's visit to Plymouth.

"Will this satisfy Mr. Horner do you think?" he said, when Roy had told him all about his interview with Darnell.

"It can not fail to convince every one," said Mr. Boniface. "It is proof positive that you are free from all blame, and that we owe you every possible apology and repar-

"You think that Mr. Horner will be content, and will really sign the fresh deed of partnership?" said Frithiof.

"He will be forced to see that your honor is entirely vindicated," said Mr. Boniface. "But I shall not renew the offer of partnership to him. He has behaved very ill to you, he has been insolent to me, and I am glad that, as far as business goes, our connection is at an end. All that is quite settled. And now we have a proposal to make to you. We want you, if nothing better has turned up, to accept a junior partnership in our firm.'

Frithiof was so staggered by the unexpectedness of this offer that for a moment or two he could not say a word.

"You are very good," he said, at length. "Far, far too good and kind to me. But how can I let you do so much for me-how can I let you take as partner a man who has no capital to bring into the busi- her. ness ?"

"My dear boy, money is not the only thing wanted in business," said Mr. Boniface, laying his hand Rowan Tree House, won't we?" on Frithiof's shoulder. "If you she said." bring no capital with you you bring good abilities, a great capacity for hard work, and a high sense of honor; you will bring, too, what I value very much-a keen sympathy with those employed by you, and a real knowledge of their position and its difficulties."

"I dare not refuse your offer," said Frithiof. "I can't do anything but gratefully accept it, but have done nothing to deserve such kindness from you."

"It will be a comfort to me," said Mr. Boniface, "to feel that Roy has some one with whom he can work comfortably. I am growing old, and shall not be sorry to do a little less, and to put some of my burden on to younger shoul-

An dthen, after entering a little more into detail as to the proposed plan, the three parted, and Frithiof hurried home, eager to tell Sigrid and Swanhild of the great change that had come over their affairs.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Cheerfulness reigned once more at the model lodgings. As Frithiof opened the door of the parlor he heard such talking and laughter as there had not been for some time past, despite Sigrid's laudable endeavors. Swanhild came dancing to meet him.

"Look! look!" she cried, "we have got the very dearest little Christmas-tree that ever was seen. And Madame Lechertier has promised to come to tea to-morrow afternoon, and we are going out presently to buy the candles for it."

"And Mr. Boniface?" "You can fancy just what he would be as far as kindness and all that goes. But you will never guess what he has done. How would you like to count our savings toward the debt-fund by hundreds instead

"What do you mean?" she cried. "I mean that he has offered me the junior partnership," said Frithiof, watching her face with keen delight, and rewarded for all he had been through by her rapture of happiness and her glad surprise.

As for Swanhild, in the reaction after the long strain of secret anxiety which had tried her so much all the autumn, she was like a wild thing; she slaughed and sung, danced and chattered, and would A Promnent Society Leader's Foolcertainly never have eaten any supper had she not set her heart on going out to buy Christmas presents at a certain shop in Buckingham Palace Road, which she was sure would still be open.

"For it is just the sort of shop for people like us," she explained "people who are busy all day and can only do their shopping in the evening."

So precisely they locked up the rooms and all three went out together on the merriest shopping expedition that ever was known. There was a feeling of Yuletide in the very air, and the contentment and relief in their own hearts seemed to be reflected on every one with whom they came in contact. The shops seemed more enticing than usual, the presents more fascinating, the servers more obliging and ready to enter into the spirit of the thing. Swanhild, with five shillings of her own earning to lay out on Christmas gifts, was in the seventh heaven of happiness; Sigrid, with her own secret now once more a joy and not a care, moved like one in a happy dream; while Frithiof, free from the miserable cloud of suspicion, freed, moreover, by all that he had lived through from the hopelessness of the struggle, was the most perfectly happy of all. Sometimes he forced himself to remember that it was through these very street the had wandered in utter misery when he first came to London; and recollecting from what depths Sigrid had saved him, he thought of her with a new and strange reverence-there was nothing he would not have done for hardy Trick.

London Daily News says a great sensation was caused at a skating ball at one of the principal hotels there recently. Princess Radziwill, a prominent society leader, formerly Dorothy Deacon of New York, entered the crowded ballroom seated in an ancient Roman chariot decorated with flowers, illuminated by electricity, and drawn by a team of prancing horses, which the Princess drove with one hand, while with the other she led a lion and a leopard chained together. Despite the attendance of a lion tamer armed with a revolver the wild beasts were very restive and frightened the horses several times, while the amazed and alarmed guests crowded around the doorways ready to seek safety in flight. After a great deal of difficulty the Princess managed to drive the chariot into the centre of the boolroom. The tamer kept the beasts under control, but the guests were requested not to applaud, lest the wild beasts became frightened.

HOW WHEAT FIELDS SWEAT.

and Plant Moisture.

When you are perspiring furiously in the dog days of this year, it may or may not console you to think that an ordinary field of wheat is giving off moisture quite as furiously.

Between the months of April and July, according to Professor Sir-James Dewar, a field of wheat perspires sufficient moisture to coverthe surface of its ground to the depth of nine inches. Another interesting fact is that it requires 3½ lbs. of water to produce 16. grains of corn.

These and other wonders of heat. and moisture were discussed recently by Sir James in another lecture to young folk at the Royal In-How ten people-to say nothing stitution, London. "I want to pay for that barrel of potatoes I got.'

"Can't take this money," said the dealer. "Why not?"

"Most of it isn't good."

"The top layer is good, is it. "Yes."

"That's the way it was with the potatoes."
