Christmas Groceries

We have tried harder this year, we believe, than we ever did to make the biggest showing of the choicest, daintiest things for Christmas that we have ever asked you to select from.

Our display was never as complete or tempting. We don't believe there is a single thing missing. We would like you to notice the prices of what we are offering, always remembering that they are the very highest grades of goods that it is possible to buy.

Our Boot and Shoe Department is well stocked with all the leading styles of Shoes for men, women and children for the Christmas trade. We have slippers, moccasins, hockey boots, in fact nearly anything you could ask for in the line of boots, at prices that are sure to please you.

ARNOLD'S.

A Stitch in Time

Christmas Weighs

So heavily on some people that they forget the everyday affairs of life. Now we have things for Christmas, lots of them — Raisins, Currants, Canned Oranges and Lemon Peel, Nuts, Fancy Crackers and a hundred other things. But, while these things are good and very good, we don't want you to forget the other things. Good Groceries are our specialty, and we devote our best energies to getting them for you. That's why everything you get from here is always good and never dear.

Bishop Attacks Capitalism.

A sensation was caused by Bishop Franklin Spencer Spalding, of Utah, at the recent convention of Episcopal clergymen and laymen in New York city. The following is part of an address delivered by Bishop Spalding at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, which startled many of his fashionable audience and the New York press:

This convention now on is a capitalistic convention. The men who attend it made their money from profit, interest and rent. They care not how they get it as long as they do. Not a particle of feeling have they for the workmen beneath them. The wealth in this country is created by the laboring classes. Alone the workers are responsible for every great development that is made. Yet they are suffering untold tortures from poverty. They do not get the wealth. Where does it go? I'll tell you where it goes. It goes to the owners of the machines. In this country 74 per cent of the population owns but 4 per cent of the wealth. That tells you where it goes. In this country there are 2,000,000 children working at various industries. These little ones are slaving because of the poor wages of their parents. What do you know of that?

The poor ought to be thrifty. How often have I heard that! And yet every lay delegate to this convention receives ten times the wages of one workman. How does that sound to you? I am not pleading for a little more than a tenth for the worker. The laboring classes don't want charity; they want justice. Capitalists own the tools, and the profits are the first consideration. The workers come a poor second. They are a mere side issue. If the church is supported by profits, the worker knows that it is supported by that which is taken from him. He is forming his own religion away from the capitalist religion, even as he is forming his own political party away from the capitalistic parties.

We ought to accept the truth which the industrial democracy movement is trying to teach the world. We've got to put out of existence the competitive system. The worker must be rewarded on the basis of what he renders. Every child must have a chance of life. I hate this system, my friends. I hate this system which gives to the greedy and takes from the meek. It is unchristian and ungodlike. I hate this system and it must be ended. The church must awake and must ally herself with the movement for industrial democracy.—New York paper.

No Moses can lead the working class out of the wilderness of capitalism. They must do it themselves.

Only Soldiers Face Fire.

In Creasy's "Fifteen Decisive Battles" there is a footnote quotation from Siborne's "History of the Campaign of Waterloo" which illustrates the class consciousness of military masters and the ruthless contempt with which they regard the lives of common soldiers from the working class. This footnote relates that during the battle of Waterloo "an officer of the artillery came up to the Duke of Wellington and stated that he had a distinct view of Napoleon attended by his staff; that he had the guns of his battery well pointed in that direction and was prepared to fire." His Grace instantly and emphatically replied "No! I'll not allow it. It's not the business of commanders to be firing upon each other."

There you have it. Had the "Iron Duke" permitted his artillerymen to fire on Napoleon and kill him the battle would have been brought to a speedy end, and the lives of thousands of English, Irish, French and German workmen would have been spared thereby. The Duke of Wellington was class conscious. For fear of harming a hair of Butcher Napoleon he commanded the artillerymen not to fire at him, but to train their cannon on the French common soldiers, members of the working class. When it came to shedding the blood of useful men the duke did not hesitate. It was he who shouted, "Up, guards, and at them!" and cheered and exulted in their slaughter.

When the workers of the world unite, and declare that it is not their business to be firing upon each other for the benefit of a class which holds them in supreme contempt, they will refuse to furnish that class with "cannon fodder."—John F. Monough.

A Day's Journey.

In a day's journey on a crowded street, you will not meet one man in ten thousand who will not admit that there is something wrong with our present day methods of doing things which gives the few too much and the many too little.

In a day's journey on a crowded street, you will not meet one man in ten thousand who would not gladly see poverty abolished.

In a day's journey on a crowded street, you will not meet one man in ten thousand who does not want exactly what Socialists want—providing you call it something besides Socialism. Funny, isn't it?—Ex.

The world's greatest menace is capitalism. It makes millionaires and poverty, mansions and slums.
