Journalistic Restraint.

From the Peterboro Examiner.

A man that habitually uses strong and violent language, dashed with profanity—expends it on small things—comes to the time when he will find his supply of strong speech inadequate to express something really deserving of emphasis. Those yellowish journals which blush blood over a little skirmish at war outposts; that splash their pages with red ink and big type over trifles, when the real war news comes won't have any materials for sensational effects left. We have so far had only trifles; but one of these days, news of, perhaps, the world's biggest and bloodiest battle will come. Then how will the sensational journals be able to tell it with corresponding effect compared with their blood-stained exploitation of skirmishes?

The British journals show a fine restraint. Visitors in London say that from the appearance and contents of the newspapers, one would hardly know there was a great war afoot fewer than fifty miles away. These journals are really patriotic. They are silent and subdued because premature publication of military and naval movements would be playing into the hands of the enemy.

In one evening Toronto paper we see the news, evidently a "scoop," prominently displayed—featured—that "six million dollars (in gold) are now in Ottawa." Would not the knowledge of this thus emphasized, tend to incite the animosities of Great Britain and Canada to attempt to get at this gold and watch the ways of transportation to intercept other shipments. The sound philosophy of the saying—"a close tongue makes a wise head" applies to newspapers as well as to boys. The itch for sensation that sacrifices substantial interests, is a poor kind of patriotism, for newspapers, that judging by their columns, have cornered patriotism as the Pharaic Kaiser seems to have cornered piety.

Some War Aspects.

From the Toronto Star.

A good story reaches us of the incredulity of a certain opulent London stock broker when first the war clouds began to lower on the European horizon. "Pshaw!" he exclaimed, "there cannot be any big European war. The thing is impossible. It would dislocate all business." Characteristically, and almost pathetically, it seemed to him that, while the sun and moon endured, business should not be dislocated.

And, indeed, the letting loose of war's elemental forces has changed, or modified the viewpoint of a good many. There is one aspect of this titanic struggle which cannot be overlooked. However it ends—and it can only end in one way—one of its results must be a great strengthening of the Socialistic idea. Socialism is already strong in Germany—its roots are deep there. In the hour of Germany's defeat, with the shattering of militarism, that idol with feet of clay, and with the downfall, mayhap, of the Hohenzollern dynasty, and the whole scheme of things—things autocratic, aristocratic, bureaucratic—with which that dynasty is bound up—it cannot but be that Socialism must receive an immense accretion of strength.

Nor will it be in Germany alone that a by-product, if not an actual result of this war, must be to give a tremendous impetus to the Socialistic idea—we do not say to Socialism of any particular school, but to the general idea that the necessities of the community as a whole must override the privileges, howsoever sanctioned by law, of the individual. In nearly every land the war is causing the "rights of property" to be somewhat less rigidly and reverently regarded than they were before its outbreak.

The moratorium proclaimed in Great Britain is an illustration of this. The State actually interfered with "business arrangements," and that, too, in the very stronghold of business itself. It dared to violate the sanctity of contracts, to postpone the payment of debts, and that in a country where not to pay twenty shillings in the pound, when due, is to be lost, indeed.

In Germany itself the people's savings have been appropriated by the State. And it is likely that in other lands the same course may be followed, if the sinews of war show signs of failure. In Great Britain, in Canada, and elsewhere, public opinion is setting strongly in favor of legislative enactment precluding the possibility of a limited number of men making, or largely adding to, huge fortunes out of the transformed conditions which war brings in its train—by "cornering" produce, or inflating the cost of living, to their own profit and the community's detriment, in other ways. To the question, "May I not do what I will with mine own—even in war time?" a decided negative is being returned.

Of course this high-handed way of regarding the "sacred rights of property" is justified by reason of the exigencies of war. But, the war over, will not "the common people" be more alive to the fact that peace has her exigencies too? That the well-being of the community must, in the last resort, be paramount over individual interests—that is one of the lessons which the war seems to be inculcating. And there will be a large number of pupils apt to learn that lesson.

Women's Institute.

The Fenelon Falls branch of the Women's Institute held their regular meeting on Friday afternoon, August 21st, at the summer home of Miss K. Dickson at Rosedale. There was a good attendance of members, and several visitors were welcomed. The rooms were prettily decorated with asters, golden glow and maple leaves. Miss B. Abbott, President, conducted the meeting, which was opened by singing "The Maple Leaf." The minutes of last meeting were read and adopted, after which the Secretary read a communication from the District Secretary regarding a joint picnic, and a donation to the Rest Room in Lindsay. It was decided that the members were in favor of holding a joint picnic with West Victoria, and also of donating the sum of $3.00 to the Rest Room. A circular from the Superintendent of Institutes, Mr. Putnam, was read by the President regarding the question of Women's Institutes in relation to the war. Mr. Putnam urges contributions to the Canadian Red Cross fund, and suggests sending the following articles:— Pillows and pillow slips, flannel shirts, handkerchiefs, cholera belts, socks and mending kits. It was decided that an entertainment be held on August 27th in Dickson's Hall, the proceeds to be in aid of the Red Cross Society of Canada. A good musical programme was given, chiefly by guests, Mr. Kenneth Newell giving a selection on the mandolin, which was much enjoyed. Vocal solos were given by Mr. Lumsden and Master Taylor, both of which were highly appreciated. Excellent papers were given by Miss Abbott and Mrs. James Lamb on the subject, "The Influence of Environment," followed by a discussion. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. A. Minthorne, a committee being appointed, consisting of Mrs. W. H. Welch, Mrs. James Lamb, Mrs. L. Townley and Mrs. Carrie Welch. The subject chosen for next meeting was the timely one of "How to Save Expenses." Refreshments were served after the meeting, which was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.
