How to Select a Bull.

Some of our readers may desire to purchase a bull for the advantage of their own stock and for the accommodation of the neighborhood, for it is an absolute calamity to be surrounded by poor cattle. Select animals with a head very long, the muzzle fine, eyes prominent and full of life, ears long and thin, the horns wide, the neck small and fine where it joins the head and rising from the shoulder with a graceful curve. The shoulders should be broad, but not too broad, at the junction of the neck; chest open, projecting well before his legs; fore legs muscular, tapering to the knee joints; the leg clean, handsome and fine boned; no hollows between the shoulders; chin and chest alike full; plates firm, sustaining the belly so that it does not droop below the line of the breast; the back broad, straight and flat, promising a good sirloin in his progeny; the ribs symmetrically rising from each to each, until the last almost joins the hips. The idea we seek to convey is expressed by some writers calling the body "the barrel." The hips must be wide to uphold the frame that we have partly described. There must be no angularity. A cribbed round outline is needed at once for beauty and power, a little higher than the back on which "Priscilla, the Puritan maiden," might have ridden from church with the bridegroom, John Alden, in the old colony days," of which Longfellow has written so eloquently in "Miles Standish." The quarters from the hip to the rump should be long and tapering from the hips—everything, in fact indicating that the breeder has used the best models of bovine beauty and might to present his idea of the bull. The turkeys potbones will not protrude, the rump will be close to the tail and that will be a broad, well-covered addendum, in a straight line with the spine, falling in a pleasant curve toward the ground, as if its descent told of a reserve of power that might carry the caudal member in any position with equal ease.

Fierce Fight With a Baboon.

I was walking through my lands and had my gun with me, and the baboons were screaming on the top of the rocky precipice that overhangs my homestead. The dogs in the farmyard on hearing the noise the baboons were making rushed up to the mountain, an were soon engaged with them in deadly fight. I took up my gun and climbed up the mountain for the purpose of assisting the dogs, and in the hope of saving them from being torn to pieces. When I arrived at the summit of the krantz a number of baboons fled. I fired and wounded one in the shoulder, he was immediately followed and tackled by the only dogs left, the others having been torn to pieces. The struggle for life or death was taking place between the wounded baboon and the dog on the very brink of the precipice. I had not another cartridge for my gun, so I put it down and picked up a couple of large stones, and walked to within a few yards of the spot. I was just in the act of hurling one of them at the baboon when suddenly a tremendous male baboon, the largest I have seen, came at me in a bold and defiant manner, his eyes gleaming with anger and rage; and his huge jaws working together as if in anticipation of the crunching that was in store for me. I had just time to hurl the stone in my upraised hand at him when he was upon me. He seized me by the leg first, and bit me with such violence that I thought every bone in my leg was broken to atoms. I kicked with all my might, I tried to get hold of a stone, I attempted to seize him by the throat, dealt him several blows with my fist, but it was all useless; the strength of this enraged African mandril overpowered and mastered me completely. After he had finished with my leg he raised himself on his hind legs, put his arm around me, and seized hold of me on the chest with his powerful jaws. What could I do? Every now and then he let go of my breast and snapped at my throat. I seized him by the throat with my right hand and clinched my fingers, but he would not yield his grasp for a single moment. Every time I moved he dragged me nearer to the edge of the precipice, and we were now within three feet of the brink, and the ground sloping down to it; I knew that if for a moment I lost my footing down we should go into the chasm below. The wounded baboon and the dog, that were responsible for the awful predicament in which I found myself had just rolled over into the abyss. We had been at it nearly an hour, and as the baboon showed no signs of releasing me, I felt I should not be able to hold out much longer, as I am an old man, considerable over sixty. At this stage I thought myself of a penknife I had in my waistcoat pocket. If I could only get it out, I might ward him off by stabbing him in the face. I gradually got my left hand into my pocket and got the knife out, the brute scratching and tearing my face with his hands all the while. I got it into my mouth, and held it there till I had an opportunity of opening it with my left hand. I then began stabbing and prodding him, but the knife was not large enough to do him much damage. I drew blood however the sight of which only made him more vicious still. By this time I had scarcely a vestige of clothing left and my lacerated body bore tokens of what a South African baboon can do when he chooses to tackle and fight an unarmed man. I was wondering how all this was going to end, when one of the dogs who had been wounded in the fight, and which had recovered sufficiently to make his way to where we were, seized the animal from behind. I felt the brute wished to get at the dog. He threw himself from me upon the dog; they had one rough-and-tumble, and then the baboon walked silently away along the ridge of the precipice, looking back from time to time as if undecided whether it should renew the attack. It was some time before I could recover sufficient strength to descend the mountain. I got home, however, and the dog, too, after an encounter such as I shall never forget, and the like of which I hope never to experience again.

Guardian—"How does my niece get on with her music—is she making any progress?" Musicus—"I regret to say that she is not. Her time and fingering are very defective, and all I can do to correct them makes no impression on her. She will make the scales to suit herself." Guardian—"She inherited that from her father. He was twenty years in the coal business."

A gentleman sitting in a stage-coach complained bitterly that the cushion on which he sat was quite wet. On looking up to the roof he saw a hole through which the rain descended copiously, and at once accounted for the mischief. He called for the coachman, and in great wrath reproached him for the evil under which he suffered, and pointed to the hole which was the cause of it. All the satisfaction, however, that he got was the quiet, unmoved reply, "Ay, mony a ane has complained o' that hole."

A Cure for Love.

Take: 12 oz. of dislike. 1 lb. of resolution. 2 gr. of common sense. 2 oz. of experience. A large sprig of time. 3 qts. of the cooling water of consideration.

Set these over the gentle fire of love, sweeten with the sugar of forgetfulness; skim it with the spoon of melancholy; put in the bottom of your heart, cork it with the cork of a clear conscience, let it remain and you will quickly find ease and be restored to your senses again.

These things can be had of the apothecary at the house of Understanding, next door to Reason, on Prudent street, in the village of Contentment.

The Touch of Sympathy.

Some time ago a certain woman lost her little baby. It was an only child, and of course the mother thought there never was and never would be another half so nice. And when the little thing breathed its last she was inconsolable. While the narrator was at the house a neighbor came in, and precipitating herself into the childless woman's arms, she exclaimed, "Poor Mrs. B., I know just how you feel. I've been through it all myself. Last week my pet kitten died?"—Lewiston Journal.

What It Costs to Run a Ship.

It costs money to man a big ship after it is ready for sea. The first-class ships like the Chicago, Baltimore and Philadelphia carry about thirty officers, 300 enlisted men and a marine corps of from forty to sixty men and officers. The officers of a first-class ship of the line are the following: Captain, Lieutenant-commander, four Lieutenants, one Junior Lieutenant, two Ensigns, nine Naval Cadets, Medical Inspector, Surgeon, Assistant Surgeon, Paymaster, Chief Engineer, Assistant Engineer, Chaplain, Captain of the Marines, gunner and carpenter. The expense of maintaining a first-class modern cruiser, pay of officers and men, coal, repairs and general supplies is estimated at $1,300 per day. This is in time of peace. If fighting is to be done the expenses will of course be vastly increased. Repairs may run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars after an engagement, while the cost of firing one

A Good Idea.

Many eastern drug stores have adopted the precautionary measure of having two persons attend the preparation of any prescription containing poisonous drugs. The Medical Record calls attention to the Harris murder trial in New York as an illustration of the importance of this check, because "if a single clerk received the prescription, prepared the capsules and delivered them it might readily have been claimed by the defense that a mistake had been made by the druggist. At it was, the druggist was able to go on the stand and testify that an assistant had also read the prescription and seen the amount of morphine which it called for properly weighed and dispensed."

A New Stir Thread.

A new English pattern of stir thread is made of alternate strips of lead and steel, leading furnishing foothold and the steel preventing wear. The lead is cast in grooves in a plate of steel, and it is asserted that this form of step has unusual durability, not wearing smooth even under heavy travel.
