THE SOCIETY GIRL.

Few People Are Busier Than the Young Lady in the Swim of High Life. The society girl is popularly supposed to belong to the butterfly order of wo-Her sisters, less fortunate than she, who have to toil and spin, fancy her a radiant being with heaps of beautiful clothes to wear, unlimited money to spend, luxurious food to eat, and passing her life in a whirl of delightful engagements. Sometimes they speak of her in a cynical manner, imaging that in her life of pleasure she is idle and selfish, absorbed in that which can give her gratification and minister to her vanity. The young woman plodding along patiently day by day through rain and sleet to her place behind the counter of the society girl at the same hour making her leisurely toilet, and if the former be weak and silly, she feels a slight pang of envy as the contrast in their lives presents itself to her mind. She girds at the idleness of this other girl, for whom everything is done, and who may buy what she chooses.

In point of fact, there are few people busier than the society girl. In the first place, it is no light task to keep np a wardrobe such as one needs who is perpetually going to luncheons, dinners, and receptions. One or two gowns in a season are not enough, there must be bewitching changes for numerous occasions. Every costume must have its dainty accessories-gloves, fans, slippers, ribbons, laces, flowers, and what not. The slightest carelessness in the details of a beautiful costume may ruin its effectiveness. All fathers are not equally lavish, and all society girls do not possess an income commensurate with their wants. Some of them have to skimp and plan in a way that is very trying. Possibly, the other girl, whoever she is, would not wish to change places if she were behind the scenes. The society girl's life, even if she be the airiest of butterflies, implies a certain amount of devotion to classes of at a cost of $1,000, we are prepared to give our customers the benefit of good dry various sorts, which are fashionable if they are nothing else, and they are a great deal else. Browning, Shakespeare, get estimates. All kinds of Mouldings, and Tennyson the girl must have at her Sash, Doors, Newels, Balusters, Handfingers' ends. She must be clever at repartee. She must have on hand plenty of the small change of conversation, must understand classical allusions, and must be able to hold her own in the battledoor and shuttlscock of gay talk which go on among clever people. All this makes study and application essential to some extent.

Whatever fad be uppermost, the girl must have her white hand in it. Whether or not she likes cards, she must at least have a bowing acquaintance with the scientific game of whist, though she will be wise to abstain from that intellectual amusement unless sne can hold her own to the satisfaction of her partners. quaintance or friend. To the conscientious or methodical worker every moment is precious during business hours. Each minute wasted idly by himself, or taken idly from him by another, costs him at least some extra exertion, but more often actual loss of opportunity, or fatal delay, in his important affairs.

But, unfortunately, the bore gives no warning of his approach; one day in he walks again, saying, "My dear fellow, I was just passing have them cremated, and the widow how you were. "But I am awfully too old a hand. By-the-bye, whom do er, Laban Adams was a prisoner. Our the seed which had dropped on the floor you think I saw to-day?" You may capitulate; you have the plague on you, and must give in. Mayhap the visitor is some chance acquaintance met while traveling, and wno is now passing leisurely through the town, but stopping for a little chat over past enjoyments; trip to the metropolis and has left all cares and concern about his own affairs, with all notion of the value of time, behind him.
