and clearly that he was the one man in all this world and now she knew that she had saved him and was thankful.

Max grew rapidly better. But even after the bandage was taken from his eyes and he was able to walk up and down the dimly lighted room without assistance, Elinor was in constant requisition.

That night Elinor, watching Alice as she brushed out the glittering waves of her hair before the looking-glass in their chamber, felt a new sudden pang of jealousy in her heart.

That night Elinor, watching Alice as she brushed out the glittering waves of her hair before the looking-glass in their chamber, felt a new sudden pang of jealousy in her heart.

Those next days were very dreary ones to Elinor. Her royal heart refused to believe at first that Max could be untrue to her even in thought; but daily Alice's fascinations were exerted until at last even Paul noticed it and spoke of it in his rough way.

"The girl shall go," he said, "she shall not ruin your life in this way, Nellie. Max does not really care for her, but she monopolizes him; and, if it comes to that, he is yours in honor bound."

"I care for him," she said, "more than for the world—so much that my happiness is nothing if he be not content. Would you have your sister marry a man who cares for another woman, Paul? Let him choose between us, if it comes to that."

And so Paul was silenced; but, one day, Max returning from a walk with Alice, called "Nellie" in vain, but Mrs. Paul handed him a little missive directed to him in Elinor's clear hand.

"DEAR MAX (the note said), I am going away for a time. Don't come for me, don't write for me, until you are sure of your own heart. Remember that you can do me no more cruel injury than to marry me when you love another. Let no false idea of honor influence you. You know me thoroughly. Learn to love her, and if you love her, heaven bless you both. Think of this well for a month, and then do as your heart tells you. ELINOR."

At last one morning, as Paul Marcelon was working industriously (for a wonder) in his studio, he was interrupted by the advent of Max Valens pale but very determined.

"What is it?" said Paul, looking back over his shoulder, with brush uplifted; and then Max broke out saying, "I can stand this kind of thing no longer, Marcelon. Tell me where Nellie is. I must go and bring her back. She told me to do as my heart told me, and my heart tells me that she is the only woman in the world whom I can love."

A San Antonio special to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat says: There recently passed through this city, en route to the city of Mexico, the principals in a romance stranger than was ever woven into drama or story. Nearly twenty years ago George Dunhaven, a prosperous young English tradesman, became involved in a difficulty with a neighbour and killed him. The act was done in self-defence, but the only witness was an enemy of Dunhaven.

and he perjured himself for the sake of revenge. Dunhaven was held to answer to the charge of murder, and seeing no hope of securing justice, effected his escape and fled to this country under an assumed name.

There another attempt was to be made to overcome the objections of the father and, failing, Dunhaven was to claim his bride. Shortly after the departure of the Americans the young husband received word from a relative in England that the witness had made a confession completely exonerating him, and he decided to return to his native land, clear up his record, and before claiming his bride. He wrote to her, explaining matters, but the letter miscarried. When he returned to America he found his wife's parents both dead, and that she had gone, no one knew whither. He searched for her during an entire year, then, concluding that she had abandoned him, returned to England. There he entered the British army and was sent abroad. Three years ago he left the service and purchased a handsome home near Manchester and devoted his time to the education of his widowed sister's children.

The governess of the latter was a handsome, accomplished woman, and Dunhaven fell desperately in love with her. Not knowing whether his first wife was living or dead, he did not feel at liberty to declare his passion. He came to America and made another exhaustive but futile search for the missing bride and returned to England fully satisfied that he was a free man. He laid siege to the heart of the stately governess and was accepted. She told him that she had been once married, but was deserted by her husband, from whom she subsequently had secured a divorce.

By her first marriage she had one child, a daughter, who was at school in America. And so they were wedded. Dunhaven's happiness was soon disturbed, however, by whispers that his wife had deceived him. A MEDDLESOME FRIEND SUGGESTED that no one had ever seen a record of Mrs. Dunhaven's first marriage. The wrathful husband soundly caned the doubter of his wife's honor, but that only set a hundred tongues to wagging where one had wagged before. Dunhaven began to grow suspicious. Like most good husbands, he stood a little in awe of his wife, and hesitated to ask her for proofs of her early marriage. When he did so he had become so suspicious that, with true American spirit, his wife told him plainly that if he could not depend upon her unsupported word he was at liberty to leave her. Leave her he did, but was soon back, suing for forgiveness. She graciously forgave him, and bade him secure passage on the next steamer for America.

"Your doubts will return," she said. "I must set them at rest forever." She took him directly to the city of Mexico, and there showed him the record of her marriage, and introduced him to the priest who performed the ceremony, and who fully identified her. That marriage register did

MORE THAN SET HIS DOUBTS AT REST; it astonished him. It proved that in 1875 the woman by his side was not only married, but married to himself. The wife was as much astounded as the husband, and it took them full an hour to understand just how it all happened. It seems that the young wife, weary of waiting for her husband, returned to Mexico. She there learned that he had gone to England. She followed him, and was searching for him there while he was searching for her in America. In England her baby was born, and feeling that she was deserted by the man she loved, she discarded his name and took that of her mother. She devoted herself to teaching, and finally returned to America. Here she secured a divorce and placed her daughter in school. She had not ceased to love the man who won her youthful heart, and made frequent pilgrimages to England, hoping, yet dreading, to see him. During her last visit there she was wooed and won by the man who had married her in Mexico so many years before. The daughter was telegraphed for, and met her mother and long-lost sire in this city on their return from Mexico, and together they proceeded to England.

Life, all sunshine without shade, all happiness without sorrow, all pleasure without pain, were not life at all, at least not human life. Take the lot of the happiest, it is a tangled yarn. It is made up of sorrows and joys; and joys are all sweeter because of the sorrows.

FREE CRAYON PORTRAITS AND FRAMES To all our Subscribers for 1892. We, the publishers of "North American Homes," in order to increase the circulation of our journal throughout the United States and Canada, will spend this year over one hundred thousand dollars among our new subscribers in the form of an artistic Crayon Portrait and a handsome frame (as per card below), to be made free of charge for every new subscriber to "North American Homes." Our family journal is a monthly publication consisting of 16 pages, filled with the best literature of the day, by some of the best authors, and is worthy of the great expense we are doing for it. Eight years ago the New York World had only about 15,000 daily circulation; to-day it has over 300,000. This was obtained by judicious advertisement and a lavish expenditure of money. What the proprietor of the N. A. World has accomplished we feel confident of doing ourselves. We have a large capital to draw upon, and the handsome premium money we are spending now among our subscribers will soon come back to us in increased circulation and advertisements. The Crayon Portrait we will have made for you in increased circulation and advertisements. Their work is among the finest made, and we more useful as well as ornamental than a handsome framed Crayon Portrait of yourself or any member of your family; therefore this is a chance in a lifetime to get one already framed and ready to hang in your parlor absolutely free of charge.

READ THE FOLLOWING GRAND 30 DAYS' OFFER: Send us $1.50, price for one year subscription to "North American Homes," and send us also a photograph, tintype or daguerrotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or Portrait in a good substantial gilt or bronze frame of 2 inch moulding absolutely free of charge; will also furnish you a genuine French glass, boxing and packing same free of expense. Cut this out and send it with your photograph at once, also your subscription, which you can remit by Draft, P. O. Money Order, Express Money Order, or Postal Note, made payable to

THE ROYAL CANADIAN INSURANCE CO. WHICH WILL YOU HAVE?

The latest Blue Book shows that after providing for all liabilities the surplus of the ROYAL CANADIAN for the protection of its policy holders at the close of last year was $509,074, besides stock to the amount of another $100,000 subscribed but not called up.

The same Blue Book shows that the surplus of the London Mutual was $67,176 composed entirely of the unassessed portion of premium notes which no policy holds ever expects to be called upon to pay.

Table with 5 columns: Year, Losses unpaid at close of each year, Cash available for paying losses at close of each year, Money Borrowed, Surplus reckoning premium notes at full face value, Investments each year.

It should be borne in mind that during the last three years the London Mutual collected in heavy assessments over $30,000 more than usual, and yet at the close of last year, after collecting a full year's income, they had only $1,403 with which to pay $26,182 of unsettled losses. In regard to security no one should hesitate as to which company to select.
