SKIRTS AND WRAPS.

Velvet Jackets Trimmed With Jet-Fur and Dotted Taffeta.

The tendency toward trimmed skirts is becoming more and more pronounced. Sometimes the trimming is only a double fold at the sides; sometimes it is panels; sometimes lengthwise applications of passementerie or embroidery. Double rows of velvet and ostrich plumes. buttons are often placed down the side, or scarfs of silk or ribbon are fastened in at the belt with loops, rosettes and large bows set on at intervals. Occasionally the entire front is wrought in embroidery or is made of crimped material or some sort of contrasting fabric, either figured or plain Polka dotted taffeta is popular for waists and comes in various colors. Cloth of all kinds, fur and heavy trimmings are fashionable. Fur appears everywhere and to great advantage. Gowns, capes, coats and hats are trimmed with it and no doubt the manufacturers of the cheap imitation varieties will reap a large harvest, since many women think they are keeping closer to the fashion by wearing sham fur, if they cannot afford the real, than by avoiding it altogether.

Tight fitting velvet jackets, powdered with a jet design over the shoulders and on the tops of the sleeves, are among the new things recently seen at a fashionable establishment, while pretty melton cloth capes reaching to below the waist and having a very high flaring collar are strapped in narrow and gradually approaching lines, running up from the edge of the cape to the collar and again widening out upon the latter. Dark satin or flowered silk linings complete these neat little capes, or tartan silks are similarly em-

The popular cape pattern is full and short, just reaching the waist line. Cloth is employed, as it is intended for ordinary service rather than for dress purposes. The After some little discussion the council collar is a full ruching of silk, plaited double, or with the outside of the cape goods and the lining of silk.

An illustration is given of a jacket of iron gray cloth. It has a ripple basque and opens diagonally. A pelerine covers the shoulders and forms revers, which, like the jacket itself, are adorned with black silk galloon straps terminating in jet beads. The jacket is lined with changeable surah. The hat worn with this jacket is of iron gray felt trimmed with gray plumes and black velvet.

The most satisfactory capes are the single ones, cut all in one piece in the circular form. These fit smoothly over the shoulders and flare to the heart's desire. Egg Producers.

No early pullet will pay for herself until she is at least 18 months old, as she must return the cost from the time she was hatched until the time she begins laying, a tribute which the hen has already paid. To insure a profit, even though a small one, keep no nonlayers. Better feed one hen which produces eggs than keep a dozen and get nothing.

Sheep Bloating on Rape Pasture. In feeding lambs on rape, before allowing them to have access to it, we feed a ration of grain, and also permit the lambs to graze on good fresh pasturage for two or three hours. Then they are watched very carefully, and any tendency to overeating or gorging is checked by the prompt removal of the lambs. In a couple of days, by carefulness, all danger is removed. To prevent the possibility of bloating we use hurdles. The lambs are limited to a definite amount, being sure that there is too little rather than too much, and for a few days the hurdles are shifted as required. We have found this plan gives very satisfactory results in pasturing clover. The lambs eat the forage cleaner, and there is less danger. The hurdles are very useful for temporary fencing as well as for lamb feed-

In reference to older sheep, I do not think it advisable to attempt to pasture them on rape. The results from cutting the rape are so much better that it is worth the while to take the trouble. Sheep will bloat easier, as a rule, than lambs, and in a flock there are invariably a few chronic bloaters that will be so troubled no matter how slight the cause. For breeding ewes and rams I should advise cutting the rape and feed-

In cutting the rape have it cut about four inches from the ground. When this is done, it will soon send out a new growth in ordinary seasons and may be cut a second and a third time if it has been sown early. Last year our rape was sown June 18. The first cutting, as described, was made Aug. 29, the second cutting Sept. 29, and on Nov. 8 the third cutting was made close to the ground. The piece treated in this way yielded at the rate of 36 tons per acre. This year the first sowing of rape was made on May 31; but, owing to the unusual drought, the seed lay dormant in the ground for about five weeks, and the crop could not be cut the first time until Aug. 8, and now it is about ready to be cut again. As soon as the first cutting was made the rape was cultivated, and it began to grow at once. There is 170 Kent.st., West, Lindsay, Ont. advantage in having the rape sown in drills.-Exchange.
