"It is a waste of time to raillatte apitalists and monopolists; they are, like tile wageslave, creatures of the system they found. We are responsible for that system as much as they, and they have only done as ninetynine out of every hundred off us woulld have done if we had had the chance. They are Dr. Geo. M. Dawson, son of Sir William no worse than the average man; and should had gone by. What we are after is to construct a better system. The time lines passed Hon. Mr. Foster, as a result of his visit to when mere destructive criticism is of any real value. It is easy to find fault,, time real need of the hour is constructive statesman-

Yes, the need of the hour is "constructive Dire statesmanship," and of that there is precious little going. It is all very well tto say that this, that and the other arrangement is wrong, that wealth is badly distributed, and that it is too bad that some should have so much while others can scarcelly manage to live. But what are you going to die with it? Nine-tenths of all the employers of labor to-day were at one time working men. It will be the same thing fifty years hence.

Why did they cease to be what they were and say that it was their "luck" on their requery, or their unrighteousness. Perlians they have received more than their just share. But how are you going to prevent it? Centainly not by adopting resolutions against capital or by passing laws which will fix a minimum of with every prospect of favourable decision. five hoops, and the five cent loaff lie sold for a penny. The bad workman and the good will never occupy a pecuniary lavel, and never ought. The drunken soft who works he'll have to be a hewer off would and a drawer of water to the endloff the chapter; and more than that, he oughtt to be, iff he does not change his ways. When workingmen spend more for intoxicating drinks than they do for bread or clothes, they will continue to be the "wageshaves" they complain they are. Why not?? The soher, industrious, skillful workingmen are conthink they ought, and is quite surrethat if ferent from what they are today, and wonderfully better in every respect. No Wonder They Should Wish to Get Marvied.

Very many instances come to our knowledge in which girls who have been brought up in affluence, and indulged in every lluxury, find themselves in reduced aircumstances, and compelled to earm their own living. To such poverty brings peculiar hardships. In the first place it is extremely difficult for them to obtain situations in which the compensation is sufficient to keep soul and 'body together. The pride which has been instilled into their minds from early childhood has to be humbled. Stern necessity imposes upon them trials which it is hard to bear. A truthfull account of the sufferings which many persons off this chass have to undergo would read like a work of fiction. Is it surprising, then, that we see young ladies of refinement and outture, whose pecuniary circumstances have become made to the title of the Queen in compliment greatly changed, marrying memapparently but imperfectly qualified to make their lives happy? It is common to liear such mattines sneered at, and the remark is often made of some such girl, somewhat contemptuously, "She has married a home." Wedloudt say that such a basis of marriage augurs well for the happiness of the contracting parties; but it may afford protection and confort; and these, to an educated and proud young woman, are much.
