'Yes, my grandfather lives there, but this is not from him,' and breaking open the envelope, Walter read what Mr. Graham had written, heeding little what was said of business, scarcely knowing, indeed, that business was mentioned at all, in his great joy at finding that Charlotte and not Jessie was William's chosen bride.

'He deceived me purposely,' he thought, and then, as he realized more and more that Jessie was not married, said aloud, 'I am so glad, so glad.'

'You must have good news,' the captain suggested, and Walter answered:

'Yes, blessed news,' then as there came over him a strong desire to talk of the good news with some one, he continued:

'Tell me Captain Murdock, have I talked of Jessie Graham?'

The captain started, for he had not thought of Jessie as the daughter of Richard Graham.

'Yes,' he answered, 'you said that she was married.'

'But she isn't,' interrupted Walter. 'It was a lie imposed upon me by that false-hearted William Belleger.'

'You spoke of him, too,' said the captain, 'and I fancied he might be your cousin. You see I am tolerably well posted in your affairs, and the pleasant smile which accompanied these words, disarmed Walter at once from all fear that his secrets would be betrayed.'

'What else did you learn?' he asked, and the captain replied:

'There is some trouble about your father. He robbed a bank, didn't he?' and there was a strange look in the keen eyes which did not now rest on Walter's face, but sought the floor as if doubtful of the answer.

'Never, never!' Walter exclaimed, with an energy which brought the blood to his pale cheek, and tears to the eyes riveted upon the carpet. 'He never did that.'

'He has been proved innocent, then?' and in the voice which asked the question there was a trembling eagerness.

'Not proved so to the world, but I need no proof,' returned Walter. 'I never for a moment thought him guilty.'

Then after a pause, he added: 'I have, I see, unwittingly divulged much of my family history, and lest you should have received a wrong impression, I may as well confess the whole to you, but not now, I am too much excited, too tired to talk longer.' He was indeed exhausted, and for several hours he lay quite still, saying but little and thinking happy thoughts of home and Jessie, who Mr. Graham wrote, 'mourned sadly over his absence.'

Suddenly remembering the message he had left, and which would seem to say he loved Charlotte Reeves he bade the captain bring to him pen and paper and with a shaking hand he wrote to Mr. Graham.

'I am getting better fast, thanks to Captain Murdock, who, though a stranger, has been the best of friends, and kindest nurse.'

'Forgive me Mr. Graham. I thought the bride was Jessie. Don't hate me, I could not help it, and I had learned to love her before I heard from Mrs. Bartow that you could be displeased. I will overcome it if I can, for I promised the grandmother I could not talk of love to Jessie, until my father was proved innocent.'

This was all he had strength to write, and when the letter was finished, he relapsed to a thoughtful, half-dreamy state, from which he did not rouse for a day or two. When, with strength renewed, he called the captain, and bidding him sit down beside him, told him the whole story of his life, and his love for Jessie Graham, which must not tell until his father was proved innocent.

There was a smothered groan in the direction where Mr. Marshall sat, and inwardly the unfortunate man prayed:

'How long, dear Lord, oh, how long must my servant wait?'

Mr. Graham may release you from that curse,' he said, 'and then you surely did not hesitate.'

Perhaps not,' Walter answered, for in the case of Mrs. Bartow had said, he, too, obtained a secret hope that Mr. Graham would in some way interfere for him.

What would be the result if your father did return to Deerwood? Captain Murdock asked. 'Would they proceed against?'

'Oh, no! oh, no!' said Walter. 'It was long ago, and everybody who knew him would come home, and when I was a boy, I used to watch by the window it grew dark, and then cry myself to sleep. Did I tell you his arm-chair stands in the kitchen corner now, just where he sat that night he went away! It was a relic of grandpa's that no one should ever touch again, and no one has, but Jessie would make a play house of it, in spite of what I could say. I wish you could see me and grandfather and all.'

The captain wished so, too, and in his mind that night he was back again by the hearthstone, sitting in the chair kept for so long, and listening to his father's blessing his long-lost son.

Blood is the Life.—It is from the blood that our tissues are built up, and it is the same source that all the wastes of the body are re-supplied. It is necessary, therefore, to keep the blood pure. If the liver or bowels become clogged of course the blood at once becomes impure. National Blood is the most searching and purifying blood sold. To be had everywhere from 25c. Price 25 cents.

A SHOW WORTH SEEING.

Never before have we witnessed such a universal desire to see a circus and menagerie as has possessed the people of this community to look at the greatest show of the world. The crowds that have thronged the streets have not been able to get inside the great pavilion, and last night hundreds were turned away unable to enter. Fully ten thousand people were present, every available foot of standing or sitting room being occupied. This famous combination is the largest tented exhibition on the globe. The company of artists in their several specialties cannot be surpassed, and the menagerie contains many rare animals not seen in a travelling show, including a magnificent giraffe, which is trained to harness—a difficult thing to accomplish with this kind of animal, which is usually one of the least intelligent of beasts—that curious creature, the white yak, a rhinoceros, a sea lion, a beautiful zebra, and the largest kind of elephants, both as to numbers and individual dimensions that has ever been exhibited in this country. The tents are spacious and airy, and finely adapted to their purposes, the one to exhibit the curiosities and the other to display the various feats of agility, grace and strength on the part of the performers in the ring. They are both brilliantly illuminated by the new and wonderful electric light, which is produced from a magnificent 50 horse power engine. The entire modus operandi of generating the electricity and applying it can be seen in the afternoons as well as evenings. The ring performances are without exception the most original, novel and varied ever witnessed. The shooting from a cannon Mons. Loyal is done precisely as previously advertised. There is no trick or deception practised; the cannon is loaded with powder, and Loyal is placed in the muzzle, the cannoner applies the fire, and Loyal is blown from the muzzle and sent skyward, and caught in the arms of a lady hanging head downwards from a lofty trapeze.

The above is copied from the Allegheny and Pittsburgh Mail of week before last. Mr. Forepaugh's Exhibition will exhibit at Lindsay, June 17.

An elderly man named John Drury, a deacon living near St. John, N. B., shot and killed one brother and severely wounded another on Saturday evening, after which he set fire to the house and outbuildings, and ended the tragedy by blowing out his own brains. It is said that he had been drinking, and that there was a family quarrel over the property. The Drurys are connected with the leading families of New Brunswick.

For Ladies only.—We appeal to all lovers of economy whether they may not prolong the serviceability of various pieces of silk or woolen garments by dyeing them anew. Any person with very little practice can, by the use of Mrs. Freeman's New Domestic Dyes, produce equally as fine shades of color as those produced by a practical dyer. These dyes are simple, cheap, and of all colors, with full directions; price 15 cents; Magenta 10 cents.

Mr. JACOB SHEPPARD of Elora, carpenter cut his foot with an adze. The small toe was nearly severed, but the cut was not thought to be of much account, and Mr. Sheppard limped around. However, inflammation set in, which was followed by gangrene, or mortification of the living flesh, and on Tuesday the sufferer died, his case having been regarded as hopeless by the physicians for several days previous. The deceased was about forty-five years of age, and held in general esteem. He leaves a widow and eight children.

Worms.—Several varieties of intestinal worms infest the human body, and these disgusting parasites are the special plagues of young children. The most common species is the round worm (technically called ascaris lumbricoides), which in shape resembles the large earth worm, and varies in length from four to ten inches. It has been proved, however, that all worms which exist in the human bowels or stomach can be safely expelled, and a complete cure of every vermicular disease effected by using Freeman's Worm Powders according to directions. Price 25 cents per package.

FRED. W. ASH and C. S. Carleton, of Markham, have not been on friendly terms for a long time. On Monday morning Carleton, who was somewhat the worse of liquor, met Ash and a friend, Mr. Arthur Fleury, at Pethybridge's Hotel, and invited them to drink with him, which on Ash refusing to do Carleton renewed the quarrel. This led to a scuffle, when Fleury interfered and took Ash's part, and the men were separated. About 12:30 o'clock, some time after the row, Carleton, who had now changed his fury from Ash to Fleury, announced his intention of going over to Fleury's house and making him apologise. He asked one Clark to go over with him, and on his refusing to comply, said he was going home after his revolver and then over to Fleury's. He secured his pistol and proceeded to Fleury's house, on the way passing the latter's father, to whom he announced the intention of shooting his son. On reaching the house Carleton walked in, unannounced, to the dining-room, where he found Arthur Fleury lying on a sofa, and Carleton drawing his revolver and presenting it, gave him just one minute to apologise or have his brains blown out. Fleury after crying out 'Hold on, Charlie!' jumped up and ran into his bedroom, and Mr. Vanzant and Arthur's father, who had followed Carleton over, coming on the scene just then, disarmed Carleton, who then became very abusive. The revolver taken from Carleton had all of the seven chambers loaded. Fleury has entered a criminal action against Carleton.

When the Little Ones are suffering from Worms there will usually be one or more of the following symptoms:—Bad breath, pale, sallow, or leaden complexion, with occasional flushing, swollen upper lip, enlarged nostrils, a livid circle under the eye, with dilation or contraction of the pupil and vacant expression, disturbed sleep, grinding of the teeth, picking the nose, a dry cough, slow fever or convulsions. It requires no coaxing to induce the sufferer to eat Abernethy's Worm Candy. Price 25 cents.
