A practical tinner writes to an exchange that he knows that cans made from leaded tin are being sold in great quantities, and he offers for publication the following warning:—When buying fruit cans see that they are not made of roofing tin, which is coated with lead and is a slow but sure poison. They should be made of bright tin, which is harmless, provided the fruit is emptied out of the cans as soon as opened. The difference will be easily told, as the leaded tin looks like burnished silver. Oas is poisonous and the other is harmless. This should be published in every paper.
