

Vespera.
Over the plain the convent bells
Are faintly pealing, soft and clear;
Over the plain there comes again
Their long, sweet tones to my dreamy ear.
Soft and clear, tender and dear,
The well-known chimes are echoing still
Their mellow music, far and near,
From the sunlit tower on the convent hill.

The tall grass aways in the evening wind,
In billowy waves o'er the prairie wide;
The long light slants from the golden West,
The shadows quiver on every side.
Soft and clear, tender and dear,
The well-known chimes are echoing still
Their mellow music, far and near,
From the sunlit tower on the convent hill.

With joyous peals those wondrous bells
Have rung forth praise to the nation's heart;
Solemnly tolling, mournfully rolling,
They've sorrowed for Death's mysterious dart
Soft and clear, tender and dear,
The well-known chimes are echoing still
Their mellow music, far and near,
From the sunlit tower on the convent hill.

Memories throng in the throbbing notes,
Dreams of youth in the days of yore;
A flood of tears were the lapsing years,
Singing around their misty shore!
Soft and clear, tender and dear,
The well-known chimes are echoing still
Their mellow music, far and near,
From the sunlit tower on the convent hill.

The days that are gone those distant bells
Have sent their call through the twilight air.
Swung by the fathers, gathering oft,
To summon the faithful to evening prayer.
Soft and clear, tender and dear,
The well-known chimes are echoing still
Their mellow music, far and near,
From the sunlit tower on the convent hill.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Chicago, who has been accused of plagiarizing other men's sermons, was once an actor.

Principal Rainey has just laid the foundation-stone of a new Free Church at Comrie, Scotland. The late Miss Macfarlane left £9,000 towards its erection.

The Rev. David McKee, the successor of Dr. John Hall in the pastorate of Rutland Square Presbyterian Church, Dublin, has resigned to go to New Zealand.

The Russian missionaries in Japan having succeeded in converting 4,000 Japanese to their faith, a Bishop is to be sent to Jeddo by the St. Petersburg Synod.

The Christian Reformed Church of the Netherlands, which was formed in 1834 as a protest against the rationalizing tendencies in the Reformed Church of Holland, has now 800 ministers and 350 congregations.

Lord Cairns, the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, holds religious meetings among his neighbors. His Lordship expounds the Scriptures, and Lady Cairns leads the music, playing a melodeon.

In Melbourne, Victoria, Bishop Moorhouse has created a sensation by heading a deputation to the Minister of Education to urge the teaching of the historical events of the Bible in the State schools.

The Pope is stirring up his people in Rome to establish more schools in order to keep the young Romans from falling a prey to the numerous Protestant proselytizers that now have free scope to work in the "Eternal City."

London Truth says that some one asked Talmage "what he came here for." "I guess I came to get money," replied Talmage. "But," said his questioner, "I thought America was the place to make money." "Yes, but in England it's already made," was the answer.

The English Salvation Army have been having high jinks at Darlington in the shape of a hallelujah wedding. They had no marriage license for their own hall, so they borrowed a Congregational church, and a Miss Clapham performed the ceremony, in presence of a crowded and not very reverent audience.

It is stated that the English Government intends to offer places in the Senate of the new Irish University, to at least four of the Irish Catholic bishops, and several professors of the Roman Catholic University will be elected to fellowships and places of emolument.

The King of Siam has issued a proclamation declaring that henceforth every man shall be allowed to worship God without molestation, and according to the dictates of his own conscience. Converts to Christianity are not to be forced to worship spirits or to work on Sunday.

It is felt that the resignation by Dr. Cumming of the pastorate of the Crown Court congregation, London, removes one of the main difficulties from the way of a union between the English Presbyterians and the congregations of the Established Church of Scotland south of the Tweed.

Rev. Mr. Calderwood, Presbyterian missionary at Saharanpur, makes an appeal for an organ, to be used as "an evangelistic instrument" to accompany the singing. He thinks if his eldest son had a small one which could be put in a box and carried on a native's head he would be almost as valuable as an additional preacher.

Mr. Moody objects very much to any obstruction between himself and his audience. On entering the hall in Cleveland, last week, where he was to speak, he found a large ornamental glass stand in front of the platform, filled with water and plants. "That is very pretty," he said; "but it must come away. It would feel like an iceberg between me and my congregation."

Bishop Peck, of Syracuse, weighs between 350 and 400 pounds, and one night recently his bed crushed under him. The gentleman at whose house he was visiting ran upstairs in great alarm. "What's the matter, Bishop?" anxiously enquired the host. "Nothing at all," groaned the clergyman. "Just tell your wife if I'm not here in the morning to look for me in the cellar."

Our readers are aware that sometime ago the case of Professor Smith, of Aberdeen, was again referred back by the local Presbytery to the Assembly for further direction. The minority appealed to the Synod of Aberdeen against this decision, but the Synod by a very decisive majority confirmed the action of the Presbytery so that the case now lies definitely over till next May.

John B. Gough said on Thursday evening, at his reception, that Charles H. Spurgeon is a thorough abstainer from all kinds of alcoholic stimulants. Spurgeon formerly drank beer to some extent, but of late years has relinquished it. Spurgeon used to decline to work with the temperance men because he thought there were so many infidels among them. He has now overcome his scruples in this respect and throws his influence heartily into the temperance reform.

Rev. Jacob Abbott, author and divine, died at his residence, Framington, Me., on Friday morning. He was born at Hallowell, Me., in 1803, and graduated at Bowdoin College in 1820. Mr. Abbott wrote a number of books, the principal of which are "The Young Christian," "The Corner Stone," "Way To Do Good," "The Teacher," "Hoary Head and McDonnor," "Summer in Scotland," and "A Series of Histories of Celebrated Sovereigns."

The missionaries in Madagascar made the first translation of the Bible in Malagasy, in 1835. In the rising against Christianity which followed, and which resulted in driving the missionaries from the country, nearly all these Bibles were destroyed; but some were buried, and thus preserved until the missionaries were permitted to return and resume their duties. This Bible is now being revised. The work has been going on two years, and is participated in by three missionaries of the London, one of the Propagation of the Gospel, one of the Quaker, and two of the Norwegian Missionary Societies.

The Evangelical Union, called into existence by a revolt from certain doctrines of the Westminster Confession, recently held a conference at Glasgow. The denomination was started in 1843, and numbers now about ninety churches. It was stated at the Conference that a marked advance toward a more liberal theology had been made in the United Presbyterian Church since that year. A new hymnal was adopted by the Union, concerning which it was said that "men would find a better estimate of the Evangelical Union Church in their new hymn book than in their doctrinal declarations or the preaching of their ministers."

Christian missionaries at Kin-chau, China, have hit upon the novel plan of buying native girls in order to convert them, but it is found hard to obtain them at a reasonable price. The plan is to get the money back from the husbands when the girls marry. The mission publication, China's Millions, gives the stipulations between the missionaries and the parents as follows: "That the parents be allowed to receive half their money now and half at the girl's marriage; that the feet be unbound; that the betrothal of the girl be entirely in the hands of the School Superintendent; that she may not return home before her marriage; that, if the parents recall her after the three months' probation, they repay the school for the girl's board at the rate of $2 per month."

In the Free Synod of Glasgow and Ayr recently a motion was made to send to the Assembly an overture which states that it is "notorious that many ministers and Sessions of the Church are, knowingly or unknowingly, introducing the Congregational system, by introducing hymn books not authorized by the Church and receiving into their pulpits men who have been deposed by the Church of which they were office-bearers, and are using the pulpit as a rostrum mainly of literary and critical essays, in place of the truths of the Gospel. Therefore the Assembly should either relax the terms of subscription of Confession or put in force for correction and reformation the laws and usages of the Church presently existing." The motion was lost by a vote of 19 to 2.

A conflict between Church and State is raging in New South Wales, occasioned by the reading of a pastoral letter of the bishop's in all the Roman Catholic Churches on the 3rd of August, urging the faithful to withdraw their children from the public schools. A few days later Archbishop Vaughan, at a confirmation service, called upon those of the candidates who attended the public schools to step forward and then refused to confirm them unless their parents would promise to remove them from those schools. In a single week 1,500 children were removed from the schools at Sydney. Then the Archbishop proffered charges against the public schools of godlessness and immorality; and he had no sooner proclaimed them than the Rev. Joseph Jefferies took up the gauntlet in defence of the schools. From the ecclesiastical field the controversy went to the press and then into the Council of Education, so that all parties are now discussing the question of religious instruction in the public schools.

AN ENOCH ARDEN CASE.

A romantic episode, which bears a similarity to the McArthur-Eagleson case, of Ekrid, recently settled by the Court of Appeal, reaches us from East Saginaw, Mich. It appears that thirty-one years ago there resided in Saratoga County, N. Y., Sands C. Carpenter, a young man with a wife and two sons. At this time the Millerite "boom" was at its height, and Carpenter's father-in-law was an enthusiast. Carpenter did not believe in the faith, and the religious fervor of his father-in-law assumed such a pitch that it resulted in separating Carpenter from his wife and two little boys. He went to Albany, and in 1858 removed to Otham, Ont., where he remained two years and then located at St. Clair and subsequently at Port Huron, which he has ever since made his headquarters, being engaged in surveying and locating. From the time he left home he lost all trace of his family, other than the mere fact that they had removed to Michigan. On Wednesday Carpenter, now a grey-haired man of 64, went to Saginaw for the purpose of locating some land which he had been looking over, and in conversation with a gentleman named Richardson, who resides near Flushing, Carpenter learned the whereabouts of his son, whom he had not seen since he was a child. He at once telegraphed to Corunna, and on Wednesday night the boy, now married and a stalwart man of thirty-one, arrived at Saginaw and was warmly greeted by his father. The meeting of father and son after a separation of twenty-seven years can be imagined. The young man's name is Orlando Carpenter, and he owns a farm near Corunna. The other son, Lewis, resides near Flushing. The wife and mother is also living near Flushing, and having long since supposed her husband dead, married again to a man named St. John. The old gentleman was overjoyed at meeting his boy. It is not likely that he will interfere with the relations of the wife of his youth towards her second husband. He is an intelligent man, and is well connected. His brother was the founder of the Oswego (N.Y.) Palladium.

The Choctaw Nation, which numbers about 17,000 people, has forty schools and two academies. It also pays for the college education of twenty-two students in the States. The office of Superintendent of Education is elective, and has been held by a Choctaw for four years.

Speaking at Plymouth, England, lately, the Earl of Morley, a very able young Liberal peer, said he did not look upon the enormous importations from the United States with regret, for prior to the abolition of the Corn laws the agricultural condition of the country was worse even than at the present time.

ENGLISH COLUMN.

Mr. Alderman T. R. Salley, who was designated for the office of Mayor of Falmouth for the ensuing year, died very suddenly on the 19th ult.

Perpetual motion has been discovered again. This time in Liverpool. It goes by water, and can be made to produce a power sufficient to drive all the engines in Liverpool.

Water recently broke into the tunnel which the Great Western Railway is constructing under the Severn, and the two headings of which were expected to meet in a short time, and the accident will cause a delay of six or eight months in the work.

It is stated that large numbers of old Enfield rifles having been despatched into different parts of Ireland, the Government have just asked the several railways for returns showing to whom the firearms have been sent and the quantities.

It is announced that Lord George Cavendish will retire at the end of the present Parliament from the representation of North Derbyshire. It is understood that Lord Edward Cavendish will come forward in his place in the Liberal interest.

Lord Truro has caused a mild sensation in England by burying his deceased wife with his own hands, and in a plain wooden box, in the lawn in front of his house, in Kent. It was in accordance with the wishes of deceased and on a spot of her own selection.

When Mr. Phillips, farmer, of St. Blazey, Cornwall, returned from church recently, he noticed that a waggon in his farm yard was overturned. On raising it he was horrified to find the dead bodies of his two sons. The children had apparently overturned the vehicle in their play.

The skull of Lady Jane Grey's father, Henry Grey, Duke of Suffolk, was dug up in the yard of the Church of the Holy Trinity, in the Minories, London, a few days ago. Grey was beheaded by Bloody Mary for participation in Sir Thomas Wyatt's rebellion in 1554.

At a meeting of the Inverness Town Council it was unanimously resolved to present the freedom of the burgh to Mr. Bright, M.P., who was residing in that district. A deputation waited on the right hon. gentleman, who expressed his indebtedness for the intended honor, but said he could not accept it at present.

A new bridge over the Severn, in South Wales, was erected recently, making new and important railway connections. It crosses the broad estuary of the river near Barton Passage, and cost about $2,000,000. It is on the bowstring principle, and consists of 22 spans—2 of 327 feet, 5 of 171 feet, 14 of 134 feet, and 1 of 196 feet.

Mr. Massey, M.P., speaking at an Odd-fellows' gathering at Tiverton, on the 16th ult., said that all political parties, whose differences, by the way, were greatly to the national benefit, were agreed in supporting friendly societies as calculated to remedy the Englishman's proverbial want of thrift. He believed that Englishmen were superior to any other nation under the sun, but they were inferior in the matter of thrift to the French and Irish.

A project for a tunnel under the River Mersey, between Liverpool and Birkenhead, has taken definite shape. Its estimated cost is £500,000, and the Liverpool Town Council, the Mersey Docks and Harbor Board, the railways having termini at Birkenhead, and the Birkenhead Town Council are expected to co-operate in the enterprise, for which the necessary powers are to be asked of Parliament at the next session.

Since the Town Talk prosecutions raised some long justified comment on the public sale of the portraits of women of fashion, a really serious effort has been made by those most interested to stop the sale. In some of the London shop windows where this class of photograph is exhibited, notices are placed that after the present stock of them is exhausted no more can be obtained. The photographers have been warned that they are in danger of prosecution.

At a luncheon held at the Town Hall, Crediton, on the 20th ult., Sir John Shelley in the chair, Colonel Buller presented Private Lethbridge, of the 13th Infantry, who had seen active service in the Zulu war, with a handsome silver watch, gold chain and locket, which had been subscribed for by his fellow-townsmen on his return to his native town. Corporal Berry, 124th, would have been similarly honored, but he remains in Africa, where he has purchased his discharge. His brother represented him, and his present will be transmitted by Sir J. Shelley.

He would undertake to say that during the last twenty or thirty years there had been more careless girls living in England, in proportion to the population, in affluence and idleness, than we had ever seen before. Instead of many of these wasting their lives in luxurious drawing-rooms, would it not be much better that they should give themselves to intellectual pursuits, that they should become students, that they should, in fact, subject their minds to the discipline which was to be afforded by a college?—Report of Jacob Bright's address at Manchester, England.

During the hearing of a case in which Joseph Brock was summoned for not sending a boy, twelve years of age, to school, the Lord Mayor, presiding in the justice-room of the Mansion House, spoke strongly of the law which compelled boys to go to school who could already read and write fairly. Addressing the representative of the London School Board, His Lordship remarked, "Here is a lad able to read and write and earning his bread and cheese, and you come and pounce upon his parents. It is a great pity that the law should be so enforced that the mother should be compelled to give up 6s a week."

Some curious advertisements are unearthed from the Newcastle Chronicle by the Court Circular. One advertiser wishes to "Rent a summer house, with or without garden, during the winter nights. Address by letter, stating lowest terms, to—"What on earth can a man want to do in a summer house on winter nights? This next is a delightful one: "Drapery Partnership—Wanted, a Christian young man, with £700 or £1,000, or two young men with £400 or £500 each, specially required. Satisfactory testimony of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; also give full particulars, with carte enclosed, by letter, to—, Chronicle office." It is to be feared that the Christian young man going into partnership with this pious draper had better look sharp after his tin or he will be punctually skinned "to a tender lambkin."

A shocking case of hydrophobia terminated fatally at Dewsbury on the 17th October. A laborer, named Starkie, was bitten by a dog five weeks ago, but the wound healed and he appeared all right up till Tuesday, when he complained of feeling extremely cold. Late on Wednesday night he got out of bed and went into the town naked, running about on all fours with strange agility, and barking like a dog. Meeting a policeman after midnight he attacked him and inflicted severe injuries, but was unable to bite him, though he made a desperate attempt. Four constables came up, and with difficulty rescued the officer. The man was bound and conveyed to the workhouse, where he died next morning in awful agonies, suffering paroxysm after paroxysm, barking and foaming at the mouth.

From the London World—"If the shade of Albert Smith were permitted to revisit the glimpses of the daylight, he would be astonished to learn the change in the condition of the ballet-girl, whom he loved so wisely and so well, and whose history he wrote with such chivalrous earnestness. I understand that the ballet at Sadler's Wells is composed of the impoverished daughters of gentlemen, who are compelled to earn their own living, and who are glad to earn £1 a week in this position. Among them, perhaps, are to be found in embryo the Neilsons, the Terrys, the Footes of the future. I am sure that, under Mrs. Bateman's kindly care, they will have no reason to complain of the stage-door being beleaguered."

Speaking of the case of Miss Edwards, of Liverpool, and other mysterious disappearances, the London correspondent of a provincial paper says: "At the time of the discovery of the remains (and before their identification as those of Miss Hæcker), in Euston square, Chief Superintendent Williamson, of Scotland Yard, received upward of 1,000 photographs of females who were missing from various parts of the country, the bulk of whom had been traced to London, where the clue was lost. The theory entertained by the officers is that, in many instances, after the victim has been marked down, advantage is taken of the lax state of the present lunacy laws, a certificate of lunacy, signed by two unscrupulous medical practitioners, is obtained, and the unfortunate creature is conveyed to one of the so-called private asylums, scores of which exist unsuspected in our large towns, and detained where help or discovery is next to impossible."

Rest as a Medicine.

Every intelligent medical man of the present day recognizes the very great value of rest in the treatment of disease. It is not my intention, however, in this paper to enter minutely into the physiology of this great natural restorer, but, as in former articles I have endeavored to impress upon my readers the benefits to be derived from judicious exercise, so in this I mean to teach, if I can, in a plain way, the advantages derivable from rest—and if they only manage to carry away with them a few hints they shall not have opened the magazine in vain. Rest and activity might be aptly compared to two sentinels who have between them the duty to perform of guarding a camp or fortress. They must take it in turns—when the one goes off the other comes on. Were activity to remain too long on duty the heart would flutter and fail, the brain would reel, and the sentinel drop dead of fatigue. On the other hand, rest might remain long enough on guard to drop asleep. You see that even rest may be overdone; it conduces to sloth, and ennui, and atony of the brain. To my thinking there is no more miserable man than he who has nothing to do. Were I deprived of my pen, and deprived of the power of doing otherwise the little good I do, if there were no more work for me in this world, then methinks I should indeed be an unhappy man. On the other hand, put me in prison, and though you feed me but sparsely, give me footease, ink, and quills, and a daily run in the courtyard, and I think I should manage to rub along.—a sell's Family Magazine.

The Scorpion's Suicidal Impulse.

Do animals ever commit suicide? A dog is said to have done so by drowning, perhaps on no stronger evidence than that which authenticated Capt. Marryat's anecdotes. Doubts have been thrown on the sanity of the cat which hanged herself in the fork between two branches. The suicidal character of the scorpion, however, is asserted by a correspondent of Nature. We have all heard how the scorpion, if surrounded by a circle of fire, runs its sting into its own head and so expires. Probably most of us have classed this scorpion with Benvenuto Cellini's celebrated salamander, or with the barnacles who give birth to wild geese. Mr. Allen Thomson, however, has a friend who has often seen scorpions sting themselves to death at Lucrea. When the insect is caught he is put in a glass tumbler till dark. A light is then exhibited, whereon the scorpion first loses his head with excitement, and then "brings his recurved sting down upon it and pierces it forcibly." In a moment his scorpions are over, and "his excitement amounting to despair" ceases to vex him. It is odd that this suicidal mania should be hereditary in scorpions, because, of course, the dead ones cannot have reported to the survivors that the experiment is successful, while suicide is far from complying with Darwinian conditions, and favoring the persistence of the species. The alternative theory could best be put in the words of the Ettrick Shepherd, when accounting for the reported visit of a ghost to his grandmother, "Maybe my grandmother was an awful leaver." But Mr. Allen Thomson has no doubt about the veracity of his informant.—London News.

They are experimenting in Hartford with a substitute for a boiler for steam engines. The device is now in a steam yacht. The whole machinery and apparatus for running the boat take up so little space that they are hardly a bit in the way, and the appearance of the engine and the steam generating apparatus and little smoke-stack is that of a miniature or fairy-like engine. Instead of a boiler cumbersome land expanded, taking up much room, there is a little cylinder, in which are coils of pipe. In the pipe the steam is generated. The fuel is poured in an aperture at the top of the cylinder, and the heating is, in brief, just like the operation of a base-burning stove. The little engine feeds the coils with just enough water and no more, and the apparatus is non-explosive. This was demonstrated by leaving the boiler and engine to itself for days and nights, only visited at the proper intervals by the man who fed it with the necessary supply of coal.

It is a singular fact that the pattern most common on Paisley shawls, and which had always been a favorite, was in use among the Hindus three or four thousand years ago. The design was brought to Paisley from London about a century ago, but the ingenuity of the "bodies" has vastly improved upon the original.

It is reported in Scotland that Sheriff Nicholson, of Kirkcubright, will be offered the new professorship of "Celtic Language and Literature" in the University of Edinburgh. No one can deny the eminent qualification of Sheriff Nicholson for the position, but it is doubtful whether he will relinquish his brilliant prospects as a lawyer for the quiet retirement of the University.

On the 6th ult. the veteran vocalist, Mr. Sims Reeves, appeared at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, in Gay's "Beggars Opera." His part, of course, was that of Captain Macheath, and according to the local critics he acted and sung it to perfection. Notwithstanding his advancing years the "silver voice" of the great tenor still preserves its purity and brilliance.
