Happy Hygeia.

(A REAL EXHIBITION OF HEALTH.) Hail, beauty, wit and wealth! As the goddess of good health I would speak : Mine's an ancient reputation, For my nearest blood relation Was a Greek.

Know-I never take a chill, Or a fever or a pill Or a potion ; No physic can compare With fresh air and simple fare-That's my notion.

I lead a placid life, Undisturbed by any strife Or contention In that organ out of sight Which 'tis reckoned more polite Not to mention.

In my cuisine I eschew Ev'ry entrement, ragout. And to all those foreign entrees Murmur, "Intrigantes, ah, n'entrez Pas ici!"

Men offer me in vain Bitter beer and sweet champagne And chartreuse; As my father's duteous daughter, E'en Apollinaris water I refuse. I should feel a grievous sinner, Twixt my luncheon and my dinner To drink tea; Would I ruin my digestion With that beverage in question? Not for me.

Did I force it. Could I reconcile my ribs To figurative fibs In a corset? To sit I shouldn't dare Upon a draughty stair,

My waist I've let alone; Never yet to busk or bone

Decollete, Though an eligible Peer Were to whisper in my ear, "Prithee, stay!" Those folks are feckless fools Who, neglecting nature's rules, Violate, In their wild career of pleasure

A Story that Never Grows Old.

A youth and a maiden low-talking, He eager; she, shrinking and shy A blush on her face as she listens. And yet a soft tear in her eye.

Oh! sweet bloomed the red damask roses, And sweet sang the thrush on the spray. And bright was the glamor of sunshine That made the world fair on that day.

But, oh! not so sweet the red roses, So sweet the bird's song from above, So bright the gold glamor of sunshine, As was the sweet glamor of love

That fell on that pair in the garden, As 'mid the fair flowers they strolled ! And there, as 'twas first told in Eden. Again was Love's tender tale told.

These commissioners are the judges of both the law and the fact, without the aid of a jury. The police are almost invariably sustained.

Within a few weeks after the promulgation of this law about fifty newspapers were suppressed by the police, at a loss to the proprietors estimated at $500,000, a large number of families being thereby thrown out of employment. All meetings susprohibited. All tangible organization was annihilated, and the mildest of printed socialistic ideas was sternly suppressed. The man of iron made sure that no new converts should be made, and that the rising generation of workingmen should grow up in the political faith as it is in Bismarck.

This blow stunned the socialists only for a short time.
