MATRIMONIAL VICTIMS

Marriages Made Under False Pretences Brides and Bridegrooms who Deceive Each Other—Interesting Cases

That matrimony does occasionally lead to disillusion is a fact which its most ardent champions will scarcely dispute; but it is happily not often that the eye-opening comes so quickly and cruelly after the ceremony as in the case of a certain French count of whom this instructive story is told.

The count was blessed with an excellent cook, who could prepare his favorite dishes as no one else could, and he was also cursed with a small income quite incommensurate, as in the case of so many of us, with his wishes. To provide for the good woman, and to provide for his occasional presents which did not involve putting his hand in his pocket, and among them was a lottery ticket which he had had in his possession for some years.

A few years later, as fate decreed, the ticket drew a prize of 500,000 francs (roughly $100,000), and the count in made up his mind to recover it even at the price of marrying his cook.

The ceremony was duly performed at the Mairie, and on their return home the count asked his buxom bride to fetch the ticket. Then came

THE TRAGIC CONFESSION that the ticket was no longer hers; she had given it to her cousin, the coachman, as some small compensation for breaking her engagement to him.

In another case of early disillusion it was the wife of a count—this time a German—who was the victim. Like his French fellow-sufferer, the count was a man of small means, and he had taken to wife the wealthy widow of a baron who had a large estate.

SEALING AT THE ALTAR. In another case in which the writer was interested professionally, both husband and wife were proved guilty of obtaining a life-partner under false pretences.

Here is a case which is within the writer's knowledge. In this instance, which had a tragic termination, the daughter of a West-country clergyman became the wife of a handsome, gentlemanly man whose acquaintance she had made at a boarding-house.

HAPPY THOUGH LIVING

Oxford Professor's Rules in the Game of Life—Master Word is "Work."

The sayings of Dr. William Osler, the versatile physician, who won universal notoriety last February by the distorted report which attributed to him the declaration that you men should be chloroformed at sixty, have now been collected by an admirer and published in book form under the title of "Counsels and Ideals."

Dr. Osler was for fifteen years Professor of Medicine at the John Hopkins University at Baltimore. Last March he was appointed Regius Professor of Medicine in the University of Oxford.

"The secret of life" as Dr. Osler has "seen the game played" and "tried to play it" himself, is offered with much confidence.

"The master word is Work." And the methods and maxims by which this secret—work—is to be practised include the following:

"The secret of successful working lies in the systematic arrangement of what you have to do, and in the methodical performance of it."

"Much study is not only believed to be a weariness of the flesh, but also an active cause of ill-health of mind in all grades and phases. I deny that work, legitimate work, has anything to do with this. It is that I find Worry who is responsible for the majority of cases."

"Do not get too deeply absorbed to the exclusion of all outside interests. No matter what it is, have an outside hobby."

"Under the heading 'Cupid and Marriage,' the compiler gathers some of Dr. Osler's views on the need for students and young doctors to guard against falling in love."

"The mistress of your studies should be the heavenly Aphrodite. Give her your whole heart, and she will give you protection and friend. If she finds you trifling and coquetting with her rival, the younger earthly Aphrodite, she will whistle you off."

"In plainer language, put your affections in cold storage for a few years, and you will also then out-ripen, perhaps a little mellow, but certainly less subject to those frequent changes which perplex so many young men."

CRIPPLING SCIATICA A Sure and Certain Way to Cure this Terrible Torture

There is just one sure, scientific cure for sciatica, rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, headaches—you must drive the pain from your blood and nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Lumbago never cures blood and nerve disease. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills strike right at the cause because they actually make new blood.

When a child is well, give it no medicine. It is a wholesome adage. But at the first sign of trouble the careful mother will give Baby's Own Tablets promptly, cure indigestion, colic, constipation, diarrhoea, simple fevers and teething troubles. They contain not one particle of opiate or poisonous "soothing" stuff, yet they give refreshing sleep because they remove the cause of sleeplessness and the child awakens bright and well.

IN EDUCATIONAL MATTERS

CANADA IS BEHIND

Professor McCallum of the University of Toronto, addressed the Canadian Club in St. Catharines, last week on "Canadian Nationalism and our Educational System."

The primary schools are not as efficient to-day as they were thirty years ago, he said, principally on account of the parsimony of the people.

There is no reason, he said, why the University of Toronto should not receive the same financial support as the University of Michigan, Ontario is fully as wealthy as Michigan.

He was gratified that the Ontario Government had last year given the University added financial consideration.

LIFE WORTH LIVING.

Appreciation of Duty By Tom Watson.

"The life which is truly worth living," says Tom Watson in his magazine for August, "has not always led a base, worldly, success, happiness and earthly honors."

"Too often the man who consecrates himself to the nobler purpose has been led away into captivity by pitiless foes, has died at the stake amid tortures."

"I have fought a good fight. Never once did I lower my flag. To the Right, as God gave me to see it. It was always true. Not once did I bend the knee to the life of ease and comfort."

"On millions of my fellow-men I found the chains of a bondage more galling than slavery; I did my utmost to show them how to be free."

"I found the old foes of the human race winning ground day by day; the rich man grinding the face of the poor; the tyrant using Law and Government to rob the weak of the priest's sacred Faith over the sunny fields of God-given Reason; the Church and the State once more uniting to plunder the human race and to divide the spoil."

"Against these ancient devourers of men against these relentless foes of the freedom and development of humanity, I raised the cry of defiance, I fought them with all the power that was within me, doing what man might do to arouse my fellow-man to a sense of the peril which was coming upon him."

"Loneliness pained but did not subdue me; persecution adduced but did not conquer me; friends deserted but were not multiplied, but I was not utterly cast down. The sacred torch of human progress I held aloft, even as better men had done in the ages of the past."

"It is light will not fail. Others will seize upon it and bear it on. Some the night will pass, and the human race will no longer grope in gloom."

"Thus one will have lived the life worth living, whether he dwells in log hut or stately mansion."

"The creed of such a man is an inspiration; his life a call to duty. His tomb becomes an altar; his death a song of triumph. Neither run nor stop, and the influence of his thought for the world as such as Duty has a devotee and Truth a holy shrine."

The hero of John Hay's celebrated poem, "Little Breeches," is a son of Solomon Van Scoy, of New Virginia, Iowa, a husky farmer. Laren Talbot, of Sioux City, a cousin, recalls the incident upon which the poem was based, and tells about it as follows:

"My cousin Van Scoy, a man of about 40 years old when he broke into fame, Van Scoy was driving a spirited team near New Virginia one day, and when he got out of the wagon for a minute the team dashed away with the boy in the wagon. The horses were wild, the fences and the father rushed to the spot, fearing to find the little fellow, but on the approach of his father the boy sat up and said: 'Dad, give me a chew of tobacco.' That was the incident which prompted John Hay to write his famous verses."

An Ungallant Lawyer. An English barrister named Gill in his speech in a recent breach of promise case made some epigrammatic remarks about women which will not make him popular with the sex. However, he was counted for the man in the case, for describing himself as a martyr. They regard any other woman that a man knows as a creature. The first thing a woman did when she was engaged was to take the man around for a romp and show him to her friends.

Plant Lice. Fifty-eight persons competed to get the prize offered at Frankfurt, Germany, for the best method of destroying plant lice. The winner's preparation is as follows: Quassia wood, two well boiled, then strained through a cloth and placed, with 100 quarts of water, in a petroleum barrel with five pounds of soft soap.

King Edward Cuts Some Kissing. Until the accession of King Edward not only each peer, but every daughter of a peer, was entitled to a ceremonial kiss from the sovereign on presentation at court, and at Dublin castle, the Viceroy, as Lord Lieutenant of the Monarch, was required by etiquette to accord a similar salutation to every woman presented, so matter whether young or aged, married or single, homely or beautiful. Fortunately the vast majority of the daughters of Eris are extremely attractive.

Humor and Philosophy. People who fall to make good can usually make good excuses.

Only Safety. "He can't think of anything to say when in the presence of ladies."

In Prosperity Town. "He claims to be able to read the signs of the times."
