Musie in a Barber's Shop.

If we go from the gentleman's parlor to the barber's shop of the twentieth century, we find unmistakable evidences of the popularity of music. People would seem to have had more time in those days than now and do not appear to have minded waiting much as brisker moderns, and as a barber provided means to amuse those who were waiting their turn. For purpose he had the virginals in the corner, the precursor of our present instrument, which by pressing keys like a piano and keys the strings were struck with a hammer, as in our piano, but with a quill or elastic piece of wood, or er or of metal. A virginal of the south is still preserved in the South Kensington museum in London.—Lippincott's.

What He Saw.

An Irish teamster went to his priest in a great fright and told him that he had seen a ghost on the wall as he passed it in the night. "And what was it like?" asked the priest. "It was like nothing so much as a big ass," said Patrick, wild eyed. "Go home, Pat, and be easy," replied the priest soothingly. "You've seen your own shadow."

VETERINARY SURGEON

Origin of the Word "Cuba."

Cuba is the name by which the island was originally known to the Cayman Indians, who were with Columbus when he discovered it. One of the villages or cities was called by the Cubanans, and it is reported that from the similarity of sounds Columbus, still supposing himself to be on the coast of Asia, imagined that the name of the city was Kubla Khan, the Tartar sovereign celebrated by Marco Polo. The survival of the original name for Cuba is a remarkable instance of persistence, as the island was baptised and rebaptised many times since its European discovery. Columbus first called it Janna in honor of Prince John, the son of Ferdinand and Isabella. After Ferdinand's death it was called in his memory Fernandina. Subsequently this name was changed to Santiago, after St. James the patron saint of Spain. Still later it was named Ave Maria, in honor of the Virgin Mary. But none of the names held, and the Indian name is still preserved.

He Cornered Tilden.

Samuel J. Tilden had a touch of humor, at times querulous in its tone, but at other times he could be funny without meaning to be. He was an expert judge of wines, and his cellar was choicely stocked. When dining, however, he had a little way of ordering by the taste of his guest and following accordingly. Colonel John A. Fellows noted this trait and one when dining with Mr. Tilden saw the brand for his plate and a very choice vintage for himself. Mr. Tilden called away from the table for a moment, and the colonel deftly slipped the bottles. When Tilden lifted the pint to pour out the wine, he quickly noted the difference. "That's got out of the difficulty nicely," he wrote, "he said, 'you have made a mistake in my wine. I want the kind Colonel Fellows has.'"
