Admiral Havenful, it's kind of you to ask, but I ain't well at all; I'm very much obliged to you," said Mr. Toosypegs, in a deeply dejected voice, as he walked into the parlor of the White Squall and took his seat without ever raising his eyes from the

"Stand from under!" growled the admiral, in a tone like a bear with the bronchitis, as he gave his glazed hat a slap down on his head, and looked in a bewildered sort of way at the melancholy face of Mr. O. C.

"Admiral Havenful, it's my intention to stand from under as much as possible," said Mr. Toosypegs mournfully; "but, at the same time, I'm just as miserable as ever I can be, thank you. I don't see what I was born for at all, either. I dare say they meant well about it; but at the same time, I don't see what I was born for," said Mr. Toosypegs, with increased mournfulness.

The admiral laid both hands on his knees, and leaning over, looked solemnly into Mr. Toosypeg's face. Reading no expression whatever in that "Book of Beauty" but the mildest sort of despair, he drew himself up again, and grunted out an adjuration to "heave ahead."

"Admiral Havenful, would you oblige me by not saying that again?" said Mr. Toosypegs. "You mean real well, I know; but it recalls unpleasant recollections that I wish buried in oblivion. Ugh!" said Mr. Toosypegs, with a convulsive shud-

"Miss Pet," burst out Mr, Toosypegs, in a sort of desperation, "it's very good of you to ask me, and I'm very much obliged to you; but you don't understand my feeling at all. It's an unfortunate attachment-" "An attachment?" exclaimed Pet. 'Whew, that is bad! Why, Orlando,

I didn't think you owed anybody anything. When was this attachment issued against you?" "O Miss Pet! can't you understand? My gracious! that ain't the sort of attachment I mean at all. It's not legal-" "Then it's illegal," said Pet, with where do you expect to go to! I never expected to have any such confession from your lips. An illegal attachment! O my stars and gar-(Continued next week)

Martineau's Defalcations Still the Subject of Investigation. Ottawa, Feb. 23.-Investigation is still proceeding into the accounts of the Militia Department, but it will be a couple of days before the exact amount of Arthur Martineau's defaications are known. The accused has several thousand dollars on deposit in Ottawa banks, which the Government may be able to attach. These sums added to the $12,000 found on the prisoner when arrested will mean will Aunt Prisciller say? Admiral I'll bet you anything you'll be as the recovery by the Government of Hinton and Young, who formerly belonged to Ottawa, and who were employed in connection with the recording of claims on Duncan Creek, about 200 miles from Dawson, have been accused by the miners of beating them out of their claims. The complaints were made to the department on behalf of the miners, and immediately on learning of them Mr. Sifton ordered Mr. Wood, the acting Commissioner of the Yukon, to suspend both officials. Instructions were also sent to investigate the charges to the fullest possible extent, and if they are established to institute both civil and criminal actions against Hinton and Young.
