SUCH STUFF AS DREAMS ARE MADE OF

The Bright Millinery Display is Again the Gay Herald of Spring's Approach

A burst of sunlit bloom On winter's frigid front.

Out of the very snow and frost the enchantresses of the milliner world conjured an array of beauty and bloom that put a gorgeous front on spring's pageant. It is said that the lilies grow on the edge of the glacier. If so, they are fitting emblems of this season's millinery, for while the land was clad in snow-drifts and its inhabitants in furs the artists of ladies' head wear with unflinching faith in the coming spring surpassed all previous efforts in preparation for its advent. They pinned a bouquet on winter's lapel—no wonder if he smiled a little.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week were opening days. The seven millinery parlors of this town were a bewildering of colors and ingenuity. Admiring visitors thronged them. Their heavy demand upon the vocabulary left us scarcely enough approving expressions to compose this article. But neither the fluent brilliance of the ladies nor this more modest effort can do justice to the millinery display of this season. Those who prepared this display have done themselves credit and put the community under a debt of gratitude—to say nothing of that which must be settled when the bill comes home.

The millinery of this season is trimmed with a low effect and yet is so tilted on the head as to make it appear higher than it is. Foliage is worn; fruit has gone; flowers are plentiful. Black and gold is a very popular combination. Ties of light material drop from the back of the hat and are brought over the left shoulder and pinned to give a fishu effect. A few words of the different parlors visited and of some hats in them.

R. B. Allan & Co.

Many of the most critical buyers are sure to get their spring hats from the dainty display of this firm. Into their cosy parlor Miss Wallace has certainly conjured beauty and utility. This is due not alone to the many most happy millinery creations that deck it, but as well, to the artistic setting in which these are placed. Mirrors, drapings of silk in many tints, palms, and synvarias in bloom conspire with the heargear to produce a charming effect.

Among the most striking samples was a large black and gold picture hat that drooped at the back and tilted on the left. Its tam crown was showered with sequin and stood in strong contrast to the old gold straw brim which was faced with folds of black meline and carried a band of English violets. Above and at the side was a tangle of green and gold foliage. In front a fancy gold and cut steel buckle caught a heavy bow of black velvet ribbon.

Another picture hat drooped at the front and back. Its fancy crown was girdled with blue and green foliage that spread well out upon a brim under which was a facing of crushed silk and a band of blue and gold gauze, and foliage and roses. An artistic high drape was fastened by a brilliant.

The fashionable gold and black had a fine representative in a creation of gauze draped with a beautiful echo Battenberg lace, encircling a sequin crown that carried a double bow of wide ribbon velvet that fell lightly on the hair.

Miss Bannon

There is a freshness and originality about Miss Bannon's display that attracts many customers. No parlor shows more appropriate and tasty millinery.

A hat very special in style and spring-like in appearance was made of two shades of rose pink and gold. The shape was caught up in the front and drooped gracefully over the hair at the back. The deep bandeau in front was daintily fitted in with soft folds of rose colored silk, caught with a handsome rhinestone catochon. It was trimmed on the front edge of the brim with Alexandrian Rose, and soft loops of ribbon. A bow of black ribbon velvet with spiked ends trimmed the back.

A large and handsome toque was made of a very coarse straw, light in weight and a delicate yellow in shade. It had a low dome-shaped crown and the brim was deeply turned up at the side. It was handsomely faced with tulle to match the straw. The deep, side bandeau was filled in with immense bunches of black violets and many long loops of black ribbon velvet. Tulle was also twisted around the top brim and knotted loosely at the left side. The hat was finished with a large bow of black ribbon velvet which fell over the brim at the back.

A large hat of black rice straw had the turned up brim and was trimmed with a large chou of black taffeta caught with a long steel buckle. Two Amazon plumes, one falling towards each side completed the trimming in the front. The soft crown was caught gracefully with a handsome buckle.

Mrs. Silver

Mrs. Silver has a far more pretentious display than usual this season. Her large show window with its classic column decoration contains some of the finest creations in town and is but an index to the well-stocked rooms inside.

Mrs. Silver displayed a cone-crowned hat trimmed with biased folds of red silk. In the front was a mass of roses, gold and green foliage, and under the left side a bandeau of poppies.

Another was a plaque of straw and chiffon lace rolled deeply at the edge which was draped with blue and black velvet intermingled. Blue forget-me-nots, were caught at the front with a steel buckle.

A beautiful hat in the window was a very large turban of old gold rose straw with a large silk pom pom in front of a tam crown. It was draped with cream lace and a scarf of old rose chiffon that droops over the back. This elegant hat was in the window and one of the prettiest in town.

Miss Mitchell

Situated midway between her competitors Miss Mitchell divides the trade with them all and gets a very generous share. Her rooms are gaily decked with trimmed goods and raw material. Miss Jamieson has sustained her reputation.

A brown chip hat was admired. It drooped on the right, was tilted on the left, and trimmed with blue crepon silk interlaid with gold netting. Both extended over the brim to a soft knot. Three brown plumes surmounted all.

A peculiar hat presented the appearance of a life preserver wound with tulle, laced on with straw braid and overlaid with cream lace. A bunch of white tulle jammed into the circle was the only crown and carried a spreading bow of black velvet ribbon held in place by a gold buckle. Under the edge were roses and foliage.

An Empire hat of chip and chiffon had a brim underlaid with crushed roses. Above flaring bows of white chiffon and pink shot up on either side of a steel buckle. The taffeta extended round the right side and fell over the back brim in ties trimmed with black velvet baby ribbon.

The Misses Paton

The Misses Paton are well pleased with their patronage since occupying the new quarters up Dr. Neeland's stairway. Their stock of trimmed goods, while not large is a fine collection of sample hats and bonnets.

A grey straw turban was draped with blue silk crepon interwove with light green silk. Under the left side was the same material wound underneath roses and caught with a steel buckle.

A mushroom shaped hat of black meline was circled on the brim with sequin. Around the crown was a series of puffs of gold and black surmounted by pink caryanthiums and foliage. At the edge and back meline ties were caught with black ribbon velvet and buckle. Underneath was foliage and the ties were long.

A fancy castor straw was trimmed in foliage and black ribbon velvet. A very pretty hat.

Sutcliffe & Sons

The bright, spacious parlors of Sutcliffe and Sons were in striking accord with the sentiments that harmonize with a spring millinery opening. Scarcely completed in time for last season's display they now for the first time appear at their best. The decorations are very fine. Palms flowers and drapings of many-colored silks make a dainty setting for the rich display of headwear, and contribute heavily to the general charm. Miss Miller's artistic taste is manifest in the broad outlines of room decoration as well as in the minute details of individual hats.

A graceful hat had a wide brim, rolling up at the left side. It was made of white chiffon and draped with mousseline de soie, embroidered in gold, and trimmed with white ostrich plumes. The bandeau was filled in with white taffeta ribbon and a gilt buckle.

A shepherdess hat of straw was embroidered in lisse lace, and trimmed with a bouquet of pink rose buds and foliage posed in the middle of a drapery of marquise taffeta. A big chou of taffeta was under the brim.

A charming hat was a turban, draped in white tucked chiffon, and the soft tucks of the gauzy fabric, were edged with tiny black velvet ribbon. A wreath of white silk chrysanthemums encircled the crown. A pretty bunch of pale pink rose buds were caught to the side bandeau.

Dundas and Flavelle Bros.

The big firm at the corner of Kent and York-sts., are showing only early spring hats now and announce another opening for summer goods later on. The alterations in the store have given the millinery department a great advantage. Formerly it was upstairs, but now occupies the large space at the rear of the main store. Miss McKusky has very thoroughly met the demands of the new situation and increased space. In every part of it tasty adornment and rich millinery conspire to attract admiration and patronage.

The Massala was a fine hat in the resida shades. An under brim was trimmed with finely tucked mechina and one above with the new veiled straw. Between these brims were handsome shaded roses and tinted foliage. A bandeau of black velvet was caught with brilliants.

A striking hat for a young girl had a round brim made of the new rope straw in castor shades. The under-facing was of tucked chiffon. Knitted round the edge of the brim was wide soft moire ribbon in the vieux rose and castor shades. This finishes at the back in rosettes. A bandeau with gold tinted roses raised in the front.

An imported turban in gold and jet had high side trimmed with a pair of very fine hair and jet wings. Black velvet ribbon caught with a jet buckle completed the upper trimming. A spray of beautiful buttercups fell over the edge to rest on the hair.

LORD SALISBURY SICK.

A Case of Influenza Which Has Now Run the Normal Case.

London, April 1.—The following bulleting regarding the condition of the Premier was issued last evening: "Lord Salisbury was attacked with influenza March 23. The illness has run its normal course, and has been attended by the usual prostration. The temperature, however, has been almost normal for the last two days, and His Lordship's strength is improved, with increasing power of taking food. It is hoped that he will be able shortly to get a change to the south, which he had been contemplating at the time of the attack."
