The Man From Home

A Novelization of the Play

"It is under the East of Haveronia."

"He did seem to be forgetting the society," the American replied. "Did you see Ivanoff?"
"Yes, I am almost sorry. He made so much of—what I could do."
"There are some good people over here, ain't there?" he ventured, and she looked at him quickly.
"When you are at home again I hope you will remember them," she said.
"I will," he replied.
"And I hope you will forget everything I ever said," she went on.
"Somehow it doesn't seem likely as if I ever would," he returned.
"Oh, yes, you will," she said. "All those unkind things I said to you—"
"Oh, I'll forget those easy," he interrupted quickly, and she went on,
almost tearfully:
"And the other things, too, when you're once more among your kind, good home folks—and probably there's one—you'll be so glad to get back to you'll hardly know you've been away—an unwelcome girl, one that doesn't need to be cured of—oh, all sorts of foibles—a kind girl, one who's been sweet to you. I can see her; she wears white mullin and waits by the gate for you at twilight. Isn't she like that?"
He shook his head.
"No, not like that."
"But there is some one there?" she asked.
He smiled sadly.
"Well, she's only been there in a way. I've had her picture on my desk for a good while. Sometimes when I go home in the evening she kind of seems to be there. I bought a honey and home up on Main street, you know; she has been your home in it. It's kind of lonesome sometimes, and then I get to thinking she's there, sitting at an old piano that used to be my mother's and singing to me—"
"Singing 'Sweet Genevieve'?" she asked quietly.
"Yes, that's my favorite. But then, come to and I find it ain't so. No voice comes to me, and I find there ain't nobody but me—"
"You'll find her some day," she put in quickly. "I shall think of you often with her listening to her voice in the evening."

"You agree," he answered gravely.
"I give my consent to your marriage."
"You do?" cried Ethel. And there was a distinct horror in her tone. It was as if the idea shocked her.
"I'll place it in your hands," he answered and then was rudely turned about by Horace, who had approached.
"I protest against this!" cried the young man. "She does not know what she's doing! I for one won't have it!"
"Too late!" cried Ethel, with a choking sob. "It's consented!"
"And with a bowed head she ran from them into the hotel."

CHAPTER XIX IN SUSPENSE

HORACE turned on Pike. His voice trembled with suppressed rage.
"A fine guardian, you are!"
he said wittily. "You came here to protect her from something you thought was rotten. Now we all know it's rotten you hand her over!"
The lad paused, and then he laughed bitterly.
"Jove," he exclaimed of a sudden, "I shouldn't be surprised if you consent to the settlement too!"
The lawyer looked at him gravely.
"My son, I shouldn't be surprised if I did."

"By the Lord, but you play a queer game, Mr. Pike."
"Oh, I'm just crossing the Rubicon.
Your father used to say: 'If you're going to cross the Rubicon, cross it.
Don't wade out to the middle and stand there. You only get h-l from both sides!'"
"I beg your pardon," said a voice behind them, and they turned to find Lady Creech. She went on, addressing Horace:
"Mr. Granger-Simpson, have you seen my nephew?"
"No, I've never avoided that, if you don't mind my saying so," Horace replied.
"I'm sorry, Lady Creech," he went on, "but I've had a most awful shaking up, and I'm thinking of going back home with Mr. Pike. I think he's solely right in his ideas. You know we abused him, not only for himself, but for his vulgar friend, yet his vulgar friend turned out to be a grand duke, and look at what our friends turned out to be!"
He stopped abruptly at the entrance and disappeared into the hotel. Almeric's voice was heard as Lady Creech turned to go, and Pike smiled.
"Here he comes now, bending under the blow," he said.
Almeric appeared with a white bull pup, which he handed over to Mariano with a remark that he would be
"Wash him a bit, old chap; tepid water, you know, and a drop of milk afterward—nothing but milk, you know. Be deuced careful, I say!" As Mariano disappeared with the dog at arm's length Lady Creech said solemnly:
"Almeric, really there are more important things, you know."
"Rot!" replied the young man. "I almost missed him. But I think I'm to be congratulated, you know. Eh?"
"I think you are, my son," said Ethel quietly.
"Almeric!" declared Almeric. And Lady Creech started forward.
"And the settlement?" she asked.
Pike nodded.

"The settlement also—everything!"
Ethel came from the side of the terrace, followed by Horace, who seemed to be arguing with her.
"Of course I never worried, you know," said Almeric. "But I fancy it will be a weight off the poor governor's mind. I'll wire him at Naples, for he'll be glad to know about that bally convict chap—the arrangement you made with him, you know."
"Almeric, I think it's noble to be brave in trouble, but—" Ethel began, and Pike smiled behind his hand. Al-meric looked at her in astonishment.
"I say, you know, you're really good me!"
"I mean that I admire you for your pluck, for your seeming unconcern under disgrace, but—"
"Disgraced! Why, who's disgraced?
Not even the governor, as I said it!
You got that chap called off, didn't you?"
"Whom do you mean?" she asked, woodward in her voice.
"Why, that convict chap. Didn't you send him away? You bought him off so he wouldn't talk, didn't you—gave him money not to bother us?"
She whirled on him like a storm.
"Why, heaven pity you! Do you think that?" she cried.

Almeric was taken aback.
"Oh—what! He wouldn't agree!
Oh, I say, that will be a pill for the governor—he'll be worried, you know!"
Ethel went close to him.
"Don't you see that you've got to worry a little about yourself; that you've got to begin to do something worthy that will obliterate this shame! To work—to work!"
"What possible need will there be for that? Why, there's the settlement!" cried Ethel, against
"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"You talk of settlements, now?"

"Don't you see? The only objection was the settlement, and Mr. Pike's gives his consent to that."
"He's consented to that!" she asked.
"With his own lips. Didn't you?" Al-meric asked Pike.
"I did," said the lawyer quietly.
She recoiled from the group.
"Yesterday, when I wanted something I thought of value, he refused to let me buy it. Today, when I know that name is less than nothing, he bids me give my fortune for it. What man-Almeric stopped his leg.
"I don't see that the situation is changed. I don't stick out for the precise amount the governor said. If it ought to be less because of last night—why, we won't haggle over a few thousands!"
With a cry of rage and despair
Ethel turned on him.
"This is the final word of my humiliation! I felt that you were in shame, and because of that I was ready to keep my word—to stand by you and help you make yourself into a man.
Now you ask me to pay you for the privilege. I am released! I am free! I am not that man's property to give away!"
Lady Creech turned to Almeric.
"This is beyond everything! Give me your arm, Almeric. We will go."
"Most extraordinary girl. Beyond everything, isn't she?"
Together they went into the hotel, and Pike watched them with somber eyes. Horace quietly slipped off through the arbor. Ethel turned to Pike violently.
"What have you to say to me?" she demanded. "What explanations have you to make?"
"None," he answered.
"Because you don't care what I think of you. You were willing to give me up to these people, to let me romantically about honor and duty, about my efforts to make that creature a man, and you knew all the time it was only the money they were after!"
"I shouldn't wonder," he replied.
"Didn't you know that would horrify me? Didn't you see that your consenting, leaving me free to give it to them, would release me?"
"I shouldn't be surprised."
"You mean you've been saving me again from myself? You let me make a fool of myself and then slip off and after that you'll deny it! It's like you. Do you think any girl could love a man like that? Go back to your dream girl, your lady of the picture!"
"She won't be there," said Daniel disconsolately.
"She might be," Ethel answered in a different tone.
"There ain't any chance of that. The house will be empty still," he said.
"You might be wrong—for once," she replied, and there were tears in her voice—"just for once!"
With a quick look at him she ran from the terrace and into the hotel. A moment later, while he was staring moody at the pavement, a piano began to tinkle, and a moment later Ethel's voice came to him. His face lit up, and he stepped closer to the window. Then his arms went out.
"She was playing 'Sweet Genevieve'!"
THE END.
