Ship Five Miles Away Did Not Respond to Titanic's Message

Washington, April 22.—The Senate Committee's hearing to-day into the Titanic disaster developed the fact that a vessel was within sight of the great White Star liner when it came into fatal collision with the iceberg. This unidentified vessel was headed towards the Titanic. So close was she that her lights were easily discernible from the Titanic's bridge. Yet this mysterious ship failed to respond to the burning rockets that were sent up for more than an hour as signals of distress, or to the urgent electric flashes which in the Morse code spelled the words, "Come at once, we are sinking."

Titanic's officers who stood on the bridge on the fatal night of April 14 this vessel within sight of the Titanic acknowledged the signals but sailed away unheeding. This startling information was imparted to the committee by J. G. Boxhall, former fourth officer of the Titanic, who also gave impressive details of what occurred on the bridge of the Titanic just preceding, and following the collision with the berg. According to this officer Captain Smith himself was on the bridge when the big liner plunged into the great mass of ice, but conditions were such that it was impossible to see the berg even after the ship had come into contact with it.

(Louis Davis Mitchell, Stratfordville, in Canadian Farm). There is a tragedy being played in the older portions of Ontario to-day that is even more pitiful than the tragedy that was enacted in the early years of last century; the tragedy of the forest remnant.

A hundred years ago when the scattered ranks of the United Empire Loyalists sought a home in the wilds of the newly opened territories of Western Ontario, the slaughter began. The pine lands of the south and the magnificent walnut lands of the Thames formed an almost insurmountable barrier to these people as well as to many other settlers who came with their families to carve out a home for themselves in the wilderness. This history of these people and their hardships, their loves and their hates, and their stern planting of themselves into the soil, is a story that remains for the pen of some gifted writer to tell, but the pine stumps which yet stand neglected and despoiled, in out of the way places, tell for themselves a story of absorbing interest.

Ruthless Destruction of Timber Wealth could do was to chop down the beautiful giants, roll them into huge heaps and burn them. How much of the country's timber which is almost priceless now, was thus destroyed, can never be correctly estimated.

RUTHLESSLY DESTROYED A West Elgin man told me the story of how his father did the same thing with the grand old walnut forest upon his place. Great, beautiful swain walnuts were ruthlessly hewn down and burned in heaps. So green were they and full of life and vigor that it sometimes took several days to consume a log-heap. When we consider the price of old walnut to-day it seems almost liberally conceded to the flames. But the irony of life which made necessary the destruction of such vast wealth left to these brave men many sunny acres of excellent land. The Ontario farmer of to-day has his broad acres of farm land and besides this there has been constructed for him by Time, the healer of all wounds, the splendid modern forests of maple, oak, ash, beech, elm, and chestnut.

country, are finishing the work begun so many years ago, and finishing it grandly too. It always gives me a feeling of indignation when I see one of those engines of destruction being planted in the midst of a fine wooded stretch, for I know that in a few months' time there will be nothing left but piles of lumber and heaps of brush.

Doubtless, there are cases where trees have reached maturity, when it is necessary either to cut them or to leave them standing. But in every case where a mill is erected there are countless sticks of timber passed through the saws that are so small that it is impossible to saw them properly. It is a shame that this should be so, for there is not and has not been for the last quarter of a century, one acre too much of forest land in Southern Ontario.

which once bubbled along the hill side, are sucked dry by the scorching heat of the sun. Springs that have depended for their supply largely upon the spring brooks, are getting lower and lower each succeeding year.

THE RESULT OF IT ALL. The result of the laying waste of the forest remnant is many sided, but one of the consequences and one that is becoming very apparent is the drying up of streams. It is a well known fact that forest lands conserve moisture, and so, when the land is left naked of the natural protecting shade of the trees, springs, bably not a half mile of that distance above Vienna that could be traversed by a canoe without making a portage.

The history of the Otter is the history of many a stream in old Ontario to-day. The farmers are finding it harder and harder each succeeding year to get a sufficient water supply, for themselves and stock, and yet they seem absolutely blind, to the cause. In the cities men are sitting around the council board debating the same momentous question, and still, in the face of these stern facts, men will sit quietly and see the last shred of forest land devastated without putting an effort of reconstruction.

MAD FIRE. The residence of Mr. Fred Western, who lives near Fingerboard, Mariposa, was burned to the ground recently with all the contents. Mr. and Mrs. Western were in Lindsay at the time of the fire and knew nothing of the destruction of their home until they reached the scene.

SUFFERING FROM FROSTS. The clover crop is reported to be suffering from recent frosts, and in many places through the fields can be seen great large patches which have been ruined by the action of that element. Fall wheat is not damaged in any way as yet, and the chances are all in its favor now.

WOMEN FORCED TO HANDLE OARS

New York, April 19.—Stories from survivors of the Titanic continued to pour in from all sides. Mrs. Mark Fortune, of Winnipeg, tell how she and her three daughters Lucille, Mabel and Alice, were rescued after being separated from her husband and son, Charles. They were put in a boat with a Chinaman, an Italian stoker, and a man dressed in woman's clothing. Of all the occupants of this lifeboat, she said only one, the stoker, I could row, and Mrs. Fortune's daughters took turns at the oars. When the collision occurred, Mrs. Fortune and her daughters hurriedly dressed. On their way up to the deck they were joined by Mr. Fortune and Charles Fortune. At the stairway to the boat Mrs. Fortune said, her husband and son were stopped by a group of officers, who told them they would not be permitted to ascend any further. The women were instructed to proceed and get into the boats. The women did not realize that the ship was in danger, and did not even say good-bye to the men as they parted. Four members of the crew who had been assigned to the boat were transferred to another as soon as the craft struck the water and there was consternation among the passengers, most of whom were women, when it was found that this left one member of the crew to navigate the lifeboat. The stoker, Mrs. Fortune said, knew how to handle an oar tolerably well, but the Chinaman was of little use. The man dressed in woman's clothing did his best, but did not seem familiar with an oar. This man wore a woman's bonnet and a veil, in addition to a skirt and blouse. One of the Fortune girls and another girl got out oars and helped to pull away from the wreck. The bandsmen, they said, continued playing to the last. Some of them had life-preservers on their arms as they worked their instruments, others had the belts around their waist. Not one of the bandsmen made an attempt to save himself. Mrs. Fortune believes the last air played was "Farear-My God to Thee."

WOMEN FORCED TO HANDLE OARS

CAMERON. Cameron, April 22.—Since the last rain the snow has almost disappeared, and the roads are now drying up and the people are pleased to know that there will be no more mud for a time at least. Mr. James gave a taffy pull on Saturday evening, and among those who attended were Mr. and Mrs. Percy Eyles. They report a most enjoyable time.

Man and Pole Fell to Ground

Port Hope, April 22.—Frank B. Currie, a lineman in the employ of the Midland Construction Company, which is rewiring the town for the Seymour Power Company was fatally injured at noon to-day by the breaking of an electric light pole on which he was working on William-st. The pole is said to have been in an unsound condition, and when a guy wire was cut, man and pole fell to the ground.
