Some Sentences from a Recent read aloud to the old folks or entertain rs of Victoria County should patronize Sermon by the Rev. J. W. is the only Company that insures Farm Macmillan - Advice to erty, County Schools and Churches and ing else. All the other Co Young Men

A short time ago the pastor of St. Andrew's devoted a Sunday evening to a sermon to young men. In it he touched, skill are not found in them. There is sympathetically and with skill, some of cheap notoriety that is no mark of worth. the problems of the class to whom he A preacher who wants a full house can spoke. A few sentences:

youth and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth and walk in the light of thine eyes and of thy heart, but know that for all these things God will bring thee unto judgment." Eccles. 11:9.

This passage is a warning but not a threat. The first and last parts are not contradictory. It is not an oratorical way of saying "Be sad and live for judgment." about Kent-st. during Sunday school Joy has nothing to fear from judg- hours. There is a discreetness that is selfish. Youth is rid of that spirit that is always counting the costs and acting only when policy dictates. The free generous impulses of young men are a benediction to the world, compared with the bargaining sagacity that often hampers later years. I shall speak of the work, pluck and dreamland of youth.

One of the most obvious adjuncts of life is work. It is by some regarded as blessing and by others as a curse. It is neither; it is a fact however that cannot be escaped. "In the sweat of the brow shalt thou eat breat" is not among the unfulfilled predictions. Work knows neither option nor exemption. Wealth cannot buy it off, as the rich well know; poverty cannot escape or abrogate its claims, as the poor can testify. There is a French proverb that runs "If the young only knew if the old only could." That is if the young folks had the experience of age and age had the vigor of youth, how much both could accomplish. But they have not nor cannot. If the young knew that the force of youth is an energy for work and not for mere merriment or dissipation how much better it would be.

DREAMLAND

Visions are co-ordinate with pluck. man ceases to be useful when he ceases to believe in the impossible. When he says Business is business and no dream" he has been caught by the tendency that makes men machines. The cobbler in New England was once something of a ruler. He was largely the mainstay of the school and church, he sang in the choir-likely led it-and was an authority on matters in his village. He was more than a mender of old shoes. His successor at Fall River goes from the factories to his home. He has no garden, no interest in church or school. If he has votes they are gathered by the ward boss. The individuality of the man has been destroyed by the progress of the world along lines that convert men into machines for their employers' use. That must be avoided. While the body toils, let the spirit scar. Read books, commit good literature to memory. There are iewels five words long that are the jewels of centuries and will sparkle for ever.

It is sad to see an old man degraded, but worse to see a young man with no soaring spirit, for the old man has lost his supreme industry. Some have greater grip and his back is against the wall, but genius. The brightest fail without it, and bright-winged angel standing in the sun. Hardware with it men of mean parts reach success. THE SENSE OF HONOR.

The hoproom at Fort McKibbon was gay with flags; the floor was like a burnished mirror; nearly all the married officers were there with their wives and daughters, and, of course, not a bachelor was missing; the gold lace on the uniforms glittered in the blaze of many lights; women who in the daytime were merely ordinary nortals had taken on with their evening gowns an air of spirituelle beauty; a waltz had just ended, and the dancers were collected in groups, talking and laughing; the cornetist of the band was playing a solo, when Capt. and Mre. Kingsley came into the room.

The cornetist caught his breath and lost a note, but no one noticed. The talking and laughing ceased. Everyone knew that Mrs Kingsley was the most beautiful woman in the army, but no one had ever seen her as beautiful as she was that night.

Everyone looked at her, but she looked at Capt. Howard only, who was standing alone and who, after gazing at her a moment as it spellbound, went toward her. Her eyes were solemn, her mouth unsmil constrainedly. "Why, what's the matter?" said Capt Kingsley. "You look as solemn as an owl." "I feel just as I look," said Capt. Howard "Mrs. Kingsley, may I have the next dance?" The music began and Mrs. Kingsley nodded and smiled to her husband as she

"This cannot go on forever," he said. "Do you really love me?" she asked. "You know it." "And do you know how I love you?"

"Yes." For a moment she looked into his eyes, then she held out her hands to his.

"No," he said, firmly, taking them, but holding her away from him, "I still have some sense of honor. If Rob were not my friend it would be different, but as it is you must either go away with me and be mine altogether or you must stay here and be only

"But if I go away with you it will break Rob's heart.'

"I can brieak his heart without compune tion, but I cannot kiss his wife out here in the dark and then go back into the hoproom and speak to him as a trusted friend." She looked at him scrutinizingly.

"What a curious thing a man is," she said. "My sense of honor would be satisfied if I could keep him from knowing, for I would hate to hurt his feelings." "Then I am afraid that you have no sense of honor," he said, smiling.

"Yes, I have," she said, without the slight est resentment in her voice. "I wouldn't do anything if he were away, but when he is here to take care of me and to defend me and to defend his own honor, I really don' think that it is wrong for me to do anything I can without his finding out."

"What a curious thing a woman is," said, mockingly, but leniently. "However it is easy for a man to overlook a great man weaknesses and shortcomings in the wom he loves."

"And when a woman loves a man sh overlooks nothing," said Mrs. Kingsley. would grieve me to death if you were willing to deceive Rob. I am happy in my love f you because I believe that if I did run away with you, you would be as true to me as you are to him."

"And will you go with me?" "Won't you kiss me unless I do?" "No," he answered, looking at her steadily. She thought for a moment.

"Then-I will go," she said. "Alice," said Capt. Kingsley's voice close beside her, "I unintentionally overheard what you said. I was bringing your wrap to you." He laid the cape about her shoulders as he spoke. "Come home with me. Howard, meet me in the morning at half an hour before reveille, at the target range."
