In a letter to the press Mr. F. W. Hodson, live stock commissioner,

The aim of our tarmers in growing forage crops is to produce from a given area as large a quantity as possible of the digestible nutrients which a forage crop is harvested may affect the crop in three ways, viz: in the quality of material harvested, in the composition of the crop, and in the palatability of the fodder. As a general rule it has been found that the greatest amount of dry matter is secured where forage crops are allowed to fully mature and ripen. The only exception is in the case of clovers and other legumes, there the leaves rattle off and are lost, either before or during the process of curing. It does not follow that when a plant increases its yield of dry matwhere a young woman was disconso- ter that its nutritive value has proportionately increased. It is quite possible that changes in texture and composition of the dry substance may effect the greater yield. The two crops are more valuable, especially for feeding dairy cows, than one mature crop on account ol the increased proportion of protein. The early cut hay seems more palatable to stock, and weight for weight, more satisfactory. On the other hand by late cutting we secure a considerably larger quantity of carbo-hydrates, which are valuable for feeding, and of crude fibre which

For horses and fattening cattle later cutting is allowable, as these animals subsist mostly on concentrated feed, and hay serves more for "filling", as horsemen say. In tests made by Professors Sanborn and Henry in fattening steers with early and late cut hay, it was found that late cut hay gave the best results. Though an indefinite quantity, the aroma of grass has real value in rendering hay | CONDUCTOR BOPHERV SETTLED more palatable.
