From Maker to Wearer

The wear of a Shoe depends on the strength of its weakest part—a little defect may mean a month's wear lost to the wearer.

We examine carefully every case of Shoes as it comes from the factory; a little blemish on a shoe causes it to be returned to the maker. Neill's Shoes are free from defects—therefore give best wear.

KING EDWARD AT DEATH'S DOOR HE CANNOT NOW BE CROWNED

ANXIETY THROUGHOUT THE EMPIRE

His Majesty Has Had an Operation That is Attended With Great Peril.

HE HAS BEEN ILL A WEEK

But the News Was Kept From the Public—His Trouble Akin to Appendicitis.

"The coronation has been postponed indefinitely on account of the indisposition of King Edward. He is suffering from perityphlitis, and is undergoing a surgical operation."

By the above despatch over the C. P.R. wire, just before noon on Tuesday, the citizens of this town were brought beneath the cloud of dismay and sorrow that in that hour had swept around the world with the terrible news of the Empire's ruler smitten upon the steps of his throne.

HAS BEEN ILL SOME DAYS

A good deal of uneasiness had been caused for nearly two weeks, by reports that would not down of the critical condition of the King's health. These were flatly contradicted by court officials and the appearance of the King at public functions helped to give force to his denials. It seems that the King had been in fairly good health and spirits until June 14th. He was tired from the continuous round of functions, and extremely nervous over the many weeks of bad weather which had spoiled many of his plans. King Edward, in truth, is a very superstitious man, and the idea possessed him that he was an unlucky King, and that the old phrase, "Queen's weather" would give place to "The reign of Edward the Rainy."

Sir Francis Laking, who had been paying close attention to His Majesty for several days, feared that this superstitious nervousness was a symptom of a possible nervous collapse. He therefore warned the King not to undertake the arduous programme at Aldershot on June 15 and 16, but to rest in preparation for the great strain of this week. The King, however, persisted in sticking to the programme, and, moreover, insisted on close personal supervision of all the details of the coronation.

It was this interference that wore out the endurance of Lord Carrington, the Lord Chamberlain, and caused him to retire during the heavy downpour at Aldershot soon after the King's arrival on June 14. This completed the Royal discomfiture.

There followed what is described as a fainting spell. The King simply collapsed suddenly in mind and body. He soon rallied, and again describing his sensations to the doctor, who was first summoned, said: "I felt as if two heavy hands had suddenly been placed on my shoulders and crushed me down. There was also a slight chill and a slight attack on Saturday and the King was put to bed and remained there until Monday, when he was considered better, and was taken in a carriage to Windsor.

The symptoms of twitching of the muscles of the face alarmed Sir Francis Laking, and Sir Thomas Barlow, the English specialist in paralytic affections, was summoned. What had been described as a light stroke of paralysis on Tuesday afternoon was really very slight, but the patient was very weak physically and rather dull mentally. Sir Thomas Barlow remained with the King every moment when he was within doors, and in his brief drives in a closed carriage.

HE WAS SUPERSTITIOUS

It became a serious problem how to control his Majesty's mental condition, for the conviction seized the King that he was fated never to wear the British Crown, in other words, that the prophecy would be fulfilled that he would reign, but would never be crowned. He incessantly studied his own symptoms, insisted that the doctors take his temperature frequently, and brooded in a state of low despair over his condition. Nevertheless, he gained strength after Wednesday, and by careful dieting the doctors hoped he would be able to undergo Thursday's ceremony, provided all intervening engagements were canceled. It was really against the physicians' advice that the King returned to London Monday. His reason for insisting was that such a radical change in the plans would cause alarm among the people.

It was the excitement of Monday's great popular welcome, as well as anything, which caused a revival of the serious abdominal trouble. The cholera morbus symptoms had well-nigh disappeared, but there remained sufficient weakness of circulation to set up inflammation of the ver-form appendix, and Tuesday morning there was a fully developed case of appendicitis. A consultation was speedily held, and it was quickly decided that the coronation ceremony could not take place at present, and that a prompt operation was the only course available to save the King's life. This decision was acted on with the utmost speed. The public were notified of the postponement of the announcement of which fell on the city like a bolt from the blue sky.

The statements as to the driving exercise taken by the King on Sunday and Monday, it is now believed were without foundation. The King necessarily remained in his room the greater part of last week, and was attended by his physicians.

DISEASE AND OPERATION

The King's disease is called perityphlitis which is described as an inflammation, including the formation of an abscess of the tissues around the vermiform appendix, and hence perityphlitis is hard to distinguish at once from appendicitis.

Sir Frederick Treves, the most skilled surgeon for such cases in England, performed the operation. He made the incision near the groin on the right side and carried it up and slightly outward for 4 inches. A large sac of purulent pus was found and removed. The danger of blood poisoning remains and in a man of the King's build, incisions of that sort are especially dangerous on account of the amount of flesh that has to be penetrated.

King Edward's first words when he returned to consciousness were to ask for "George," and the Prince of Wales, who was waiting in the new room was immediately admitted to his father's presence.

While the operation was being performed, the great central courtyard of Buckingham Palace, so lately the scene of such brilliant gatherings, was utterly deserted, and an impressive silence reigned throughout the building. The equestrians talked in whispers, servants tip-toed about, and the tension grew almost unbearable. Then the word was passed around: "All had gone well."

Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour went in to congratulate Queen Alexandra, and afterwards an informal and perhaps historic discussion occurred between the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught and Lord Salisbury and several other members of the Cabinet.

Before the end of the afternoon over 2,000 callers, who included all the foreign representatives in London and members of the House of Lords and the House of Commons, had inscribed their names on the visitors' book at Buckingham Palace. All the royal princes called personally on the Prince of Wales and bade him good-bye. The majority of them will leave London to-day for their respective countries.

Special Intercession.

In striking contrast to the happy anticipation with which the day opened is an order issued last night by the Archbishop of Canterbury the Most Rev. Frederick Temple, and the Archbishop of York, the Most Rev. William D. MacLagan, appointing special services to be held next Thursday.

"The congregations" say the Archbishops in their joint order, "would doubtless be thankful to join at this juncture in prayer to the Almighty for blessings on His Majesty the King and for his speedy recovery. The first two prayers in those prescribed for the visitation of the sick might be used for this occasion."

The Archbishop of Canterbury also asks for "the public and private prayers of all in behalf of the King in his serious illness."

A large congregation in St. Paul's Cathedral listened yesterday afternoon to the Bishop of Stepney, who is one of King Edward's friends. The Bishop referred to the King's recent presence in the cathedral in the thanksgiving as a sad contrast to yesterday's circumstance, and asked his congregation to pray for His Majesty, the royal family, the King's physicians, and to learn to hope. Then followed a solemn pause, while the vast congregation knelt reverently in solemn prayer. A short service of intercession followed.

Coronation Postponed

A brief notice has been published in The Gazette, as a result of which the entire state, social and business arrangements throughout the country are paralyzed. The order is dated from the Earl Marshall's office, and reads as follows: "I have to announce that the solemnity of the coronation of Their Majesties, King Edward and Queen Alexandra, is postponed from the 26th to a date hereafter to be determined."

The best informed opinions hope for the date of the coronation in about three months' time, provided King Edward progresses well in the meantime.

In spite of the royal wish the provincial celebrations are carried out as arranged, many towns have abandoned the festivities which were to be held, although at Liverpool and other large cities the meetings were called, and decided to carry out all the charitable arrangements as previously made.

Among the hundreds of postponements caused by the sudden illness of the King is that of the coronation of the list of coronation honors.

Queen is Brave.

Queen Alexandra has borne the strain of the past week with the bravest spirit. She was always fearful of what might happen. Her Majesty took her part in the festivities at Ascot and elsewhere without revealing any sign of her inward anxiety, and when she was told yesterday that an operation was imperative and that the coronation would have to be postponed, she quietly answered: "Have I not felt that this would happen," and asked "How does the King bear it." Upon receiving an assuring reply, Queen Alexandra exerted herself to appear cheerful, and to devise means to lessen the King's grief and disappointment, although she was evidently greatly distressed.

Cabled Inquiries.

The Pope and the King of Italy and other monarchs have cabled anxious inquiries concerning King Edward's progress, and despatches received from all parts of the world reflect the intensity of feeling occasioned by the unexpected news of His Majesty's illness and sympathy with the British nation.

Roosevelt to Edward.

Washington, June 25.—The President, just before he left the White House for the railroad, sent the following telegram to King Edward: "Your Majesty Edward VII.—I ask Your Majesty to accept my sincere assurance of sympathy and wishes for speedy convalescence."

(Signed) Theodore Roosevelt.

A PESSIMISTIC CANADIAN.

Inner Circles Believe that the King May Not Recover.

Toronto, June 25.—The Telegram has the following cable from London from its correspondent, a Canadian: "The gravest fears are entertained here for the King's recovery."

A prominent surgeon informs me that the belief is held in inside circles that the ending will be fatal. His Majesty's illness was occasioned by appendicitis, but until yesterday the fact was carefully concealed.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the other Canadian Ministers here express their most profound sympathy with His Majesty's affliction. Canadian visitors generally are deeply moved and cannot find words to express their sorrow.

The announcement came as a staggering blow to the people of Great Britain. Evidences of grief are everywhere, business is practically suspended, and there is but one topic.

Lord Strathcona is keenly impressed with the serious condition of the King.

Notification of the postponement of the coronation ceremony has been sent to all the agents-general of the colonies.

The Canadian Ministers here, Dominion and Provincial, called at the High Commissioner's office yesterday, also scores of Canadian visitors to London.

At 4.30 o'clock the King was sleeping, but insiders still maintain that the case is most serious, and they are extremely doubtful of the result.

The deep sympathy with the royal family is universal. Crowds are in the vicinity of Buckingham Palace eager for the bulletins.

In the event of recovery, which a united Empire is praying for, the coronation ceremony will take place in August, but the royal patient must be given at least six weeks to convalesce.

Court officials were afraid even a week ago that the coronation ceremony would have to be postponed. His Majesty's condition during that period fluctuated greatly, he having his good and his bad days. On Sunday it was thought the operation could have been postponed until after the ceremony at Westminster Abbey, but the surgeons were fearful and decided upon prompt action.

Canadians who had gathered on the route to the King's drive from the station to Buckingham Palace, on his return from Windsor on Monday, remarked his peculiar pallor and appearance of ill-health.

Groups on the London streets are discussing the situation with scared looks and regard the bulletins from the Palace as portentous of ill. Nothing else is discussed at clubs, hotels and on the thoroughfares.

The Canadian troops, quartered at Alexandra Palace, have been greatly saddened by the news from Buckingham Palace, and are naturally much disappointed at the turn matters have taken. They will return on the date already arranged.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier remarked at 5 o'clock last evening, with reference to the proposed celebrations in Canada, that the matter of holding these must be left to the discretion of the people.

Perityphlitis is Appendicitis.

Montreal, June 25.—Speaking of the King's illness, Dr. T. G. Roddick, dean of the medical faculty of McGill University, said: "Perityphlitis is another name for appendicitis, and is almost exclusively known in this country by the latter name. It very rarely happens that a man of the King's age is affected by the disease, but cases have been known where such has occurred. In the case of the King the disease has probably been the indirect result of the attack of typhoid fever which, threatened the life of His Majesty, in 1871. It could have been induced by the chill he contracted while attending the review at Aldershot. Under ordinary circumstances, a recovery is made in from fourteen to twenty-three days, but sometimes aggravating symptoms arise which retard the recovery of the patient in that time. In the case of the King or any man of his age, there is more or less danger connected with an attack of perityphlitis, but this can be minimized by careful surgical attendance. I do not think, however, that the King will be able to undergo the fatigue incidental to the coronation ceremony or at least six weeks, and, if I am right, it means that the coronation will have to be postponed for that period."

SAID IN FEW WORDS

"It has been cold ever since the 3rd of June, and will be till the 3rd of July," said Mr. Jas. Grace, sr. "The moons have all been cold; see how far north they have been. It was just the same last year from the middle of May till the middle of June."

Buyer Fitzgerald: "Nine cents and a half is a good price for cheese; it is more than will be paid at the next sale."

Slim Pete the Medicine Man: "I have worked and couldn't get my pay, and I couldn't get law, so now I am going to make my own law. I am punching this bag; there isn't much money in it, but it will give me a good muscle so that if I can't get law against a man, I can punch his head."

"It is to be hoped this chilly weather won't drop down to the freezing point," said Mr. George Darke. "If it does the fall wheat, which is just at the milk stage, and the pea crop will both be badly hurt."

"Compulsory arbitration is the only cure for strikes" said Mr. John McSweeney. "Let the three senior judges of each province be the board of arbitrators to whom all disputes must be referred. While the case is being considered it should be in the nature of a criminal offence for any employe to stop work or neglect it. The decision should be reached as quickly as possible and be binding on each side. The costs should be placed on one or the other or divided according as the judges decide. Any union would be required to put up a sum that would guarantee costs on their behalf."

"I'll have it by the end of this week" said Elias Powell of Perpetual Motion fame. "I broke one wheel but am making another. I have it sure. I was thinking it over to find another way, but it came right back to the same thing," said Elias, as he broke into a triumphant smile at his last words. "No, it is not central force. You strike two circles, one as big again as the other and the angular velocity of one is twice as much as the other and just balances up. It is simple."

When recently asked to sign a petition for the release of a local law-breaker, Col. Hughes said: "Yes, I will sign it, and if I am to serve on a jury I shall never vote to convict a man for theft as long as the government of this province is supported by ballot thieves whom it makes no effort to punish."

Inspector Knight: "A change in the postal rates has been made that will come heavy on teachers and inspectors who have to mail examination papers and answers. Where the rate was one cent for each two ounces, it is now two cents for four ounces, and one cent for additional two ounces or fraction thereof. It will make a big difference to us. Teachers should make a note of the change."
