CAMBRIDGE-ST METHODIST Rev. G. W. Henderson preached at both services in the Cambridgest Methodist church on Sunday. At night there was a large congregation. The organ had been removed for repairs and a piano was used as substitute. A good beginning counts, and they have a very impressive way of beginning the services at this church. At the hour the strains of Old Hundred floated athwart the stillness from the subdued piano and the big audience rose and sang the Doxology of Ken, "Praise God From Whom all Blessings Flow." Then rose the voice of the pastor in supplication. The hymn announced, the piano struck into one of those splendid tunes by which Methodism has sung its way around the world. The audience carght it up and made the building resonant with song. Thus was the service got under way. "If this council or this work be of men, it will come to nought, but if it be of God we cannot overthrow it, lest we should be found to fight against God." Acts 5: 38-9.

The preacher declared that from history and experience Gamaliel had come by the conviction that right would prosper and wrong would perish. That was a sound doctrine. The prominent feature of the age is organization. We see it in trade unions, combines, stock companies, and societies. That is no play of chance. However imperfect or misused, they have God in them all. They are legitimate features of man's social, religious and industrial life. Since the world was young, the conditions of life have steadily besome more complicated and difficult. Things are very different now from what they were when men lived alone and on the natural products of the earth. Now men are dependent on each other; society is a necessity; and the man who stands apart from it negatives himself and shuts out his best chance of improvement. I would warn you of a danger. It is a sad thing when a man allows galley 2-church notes aamd Lindsay scored five in this the society to which he belongs, to become his cemetery ; yet many men are doing it. I know of no order that is more capable of becoming the tomb of the individual member than the excellent one to which we belong. It is my business to see that it does not bury me. I mean that it must not hinder my endeavor to actively develop myself and benefit the world. Does my being a Mason make me a better man, with more mastery of self, kindness, sympathy and neighborliness, a more patriotic citizen? If it does not I am a disgrace to the order. Though its aim and purpose are as old as Adam, yet it is only a means to an end. the soldier. When it fails to manifest the true spirit, it is no longer a work of God, but a work of man that comes to nought. God dwelt with men in Solomon's temple ; now he dwells not in temples though of gold and purple, but commands all men to build Him an abode in the heart. To build that abode and keep it meet for the divine presence is the nigh duty of every man. To secure God's presence a man must be more than a little stronger than the strongest, purer than the purest and truer than the truest.
