

Daddy's Bedtime Story

The Little Girl's Birthday Gift

"When I was a little boy," began daddy one evening after Jack and Evelyn had teased him for a story, "I went to a school which was attended by both boys and girls. In some of the classes—those for the littlest boys and girls especially—there were both girls and boys. I was in one of those classes once, and there was also there a little girl who was so kind and good that every one liked her. She had the same nature still."

"Why, daddy, do you know her yet?" asked Evelyn.

"I bet it's mother!" shouted Jack, and daddy said:

"You shouldn't say you bet, son, but you are right anyway. And now, as mother is not listening, I'll tell you a story about her when she was a little girl."

"It was her birthday, and her Uncle John had given her a bright, shiny, new ten dollar gold piece. She could not make up her mind what to buy with her gift, so she kept it. One day a week or two after her birthday she heard her father say to her mother:

"Do you remember poor Mr. Jones, who was hurt so badly at the fire last summer? He has not been able to work since, and his wife has had to work to support the family. But now she is ill and cannot work, and we must help."

"Your grandmother asked, 'Have they a large family?'"

"Four children. One of them is about daughter's age."

"Oh, yes, I know her," said the little girl, who was afterward your mother. Her name is Mary, and she was in my class at school. But last week she left school and said she could not come back until spring. She cried when she gathered up her books and said good-bye to the teacher."

"The next day the little girl in this story said to her mother:

"Mother, may I do what I wish with my ten dollar gold piece?"

"Why, yes, dear," was the answer. "Why do you ask?"

"I should like to buy some things for poor Mr. and Mrs. Jones and a new dress for Mary, so that she could go to school again."

"But, dear, couldn't you give her one of your old dresses?"

"I don't think so. You see, if I did that all the girls in school would know it was my old dress and Mary would be ashamed to wear it."

"But, dear," said your grandmother, "do you think Uncle John would like you to spend his gift in that way?"

"I am sure he would, mother." And so it was done, and Mary got her new dress."

Quaint Ritual of Coronation

Entire Ceremony of Crowning of King and Queen Is Symbolic of a Wedding to the British Nation.

On June 22nd King George V. will be crowned in Westminster Abbey with all the quaint rites and elaborate ceremonial which, with the exception of certain minor alterations, have been religiously observed at the coronation of every sovereign in England since the time of William the Conqueror. The ceremony is more splendid, elaborate, and emblematic than in any other country of Europe. Every day for many weeks past the London newspapers have recorded the progress of the preparations for the supreme event, and announced fresh additions to the round of brilliant functions which will make London usually sober and reserved business—the saved capital in the world this coming midsummer.

Though the discontinuance of the banquet in Westminster Hall has robbed the coronation of some picturesque feudal customs, the ceremony in the Abbey has been most jealously guarded in every detail of its impressive ritual. From beginning to end it is intensely symbolic; a series of acts presenting the King in his triple capacity of priest, soldier and civil magistrate. Each article of the regalia symbolizes one or other of these functions, all being summed up in the crown itself—"the round and top of sovereignty." The richly-jeweled sceptre with the dove recalls the peaceful days of Edward after the expulsion of the Danes, and the gloves a reminder of his abolition of the Danegelt—a token that the King's hands should be moderate in the taking of taxes.

The coronation ring of pure gold, with a magnificent ruby carved with a St. George's cross, and surrounded by diamonds, typifies the marriage of the sovereign to his people, and is known as the "England" wedding ring. The anointing with oil is traced back to the setting apart of the first King of Israel. The spoon into which it is poured is of silver, richly gilt, and adorned on the handle with four large pearls. These two articles, it is interesting to note, are supposed to be the sole relics of the original regalia of England, demolished by the ruthless Cromwell at the time of the Civil War.

The existing emblems were made on the old models for the coronation of Charles II. The curtain, or sword of Mercy, is the principal one in dignity of the three which are carried unheated before the King. It has no point, its blunted blade being a token of mercy. The sword of Justice to the Spirituality, is pointed, but somewhat obtuse; and the sword of Justice to the Temporality is sharp pointed. The scabbard of all three is covered with a rich brocaded tissue of cloth and studded with gilt ornaments. The sword of State is a two-handed weapon, with a scabbard of crimson velvet, decorated with gold plates of the royal badges.

The orb, the symbol of dominion, which is placed in the King's hand immediately before the crowning, is a ball of gold six inches in diameter, surmounted by a fine amethyst, which forms the pedestal of a cross of gold studded with precious stones. The right of holding the orb is the sole prerogative of reigning kings and queens, a custom adopted by the early Saxon sovereigns from the Roman emperors. An amusing story is told of the late Queen Victoria, who, it would seem, was not duly impressed by this great privilege. When Lord John Thynne, who was acting for the Dean of Westminster at the coronation, presented the orb to the Queen, she asked: "What am I to do with it?" "Your Majesty is to carry it, if you please, in your hand," "Am I?" said the Queen, "it is very heavy."

Legend and mysticism surround more than one object associated with the ancient ceremonial. The coronation ring, according to the "Golden Legend," was given by Edward the Confessor to a beggar who asked alms of him. Not long afterwards two English pilgrims in the Holy Land met an aged man who gave them the very ring, and asked them to return it to the King and tell him that the supposed beggar was none other than St. John the Evangelist. Another quaint medieval story recounts how the anointing oil was miraculously delivered to Thomas Becket by the Virgin Mary. The oil, however, to which most mystery and interest attach is the coronation stone, or "Stone of Destiny," in the famous King Edward's chair, in which the actual crowning takes place. It was brought to Britain by Edward I. from Scone in Scotland, where the Scottish kings had been crowned upon it for generations. According to the legend, the stone is actually that on which the Patriarch Jacob pillowed his head at Bethel. It was conveyed to Egypt, from whence it was brought to Scotland by the founder of the Scottish nation, finding its way afterwards to Ireland, and eventually to Westminster Abbey. Edward had the present chair made to receive it, and dedicated it to the Confessor, and since then every English sovereign has been crowned in the historic seat, which is richly draped for the occasion.

The chair known as Queen Mary's chair, which was made for Mary II, and in which the third sovereign of that name is about to be crowned, is a close imitation of its ancient consort. On one occasion this royal seat was usurped by a Westminster schoolboy, who secreted himself overnight in the Abbey, and scratched on the back of it this brief record of his temerity: "P. Abbott reed in this chair, July, 1800."

The vestments which the King will put on after the ceremony of anointing will consist of: (1) The colobium sindonis, a simple lawn garment; (2) the superonica, or dalmatic, a long coat of cloth of gold, with wide bands of cloth of gold three inches wide, and of the imperial mantle or

Two Young Men in Bad Mixup at 'Caygeon

Quite a little stir was occasioned Saturday. It will be remembered in town to-day when it was learned that Constable McMullen had received a telephone message from High Constable Cochrane, of Peterboro, to arrest two young men for attempted murder of the son of Jas. Campbell, of Harvey a couple of weeks ago.

The young men, who are river drivers on Noyes's Creek, claim that the whole affair is a joke, stating that they had been shut-in a shack, which they used in spare time for playing cards, a couple of days before by the young boy and had given him a ducking in the creek for it. High Constable Cochrane came up from Peterboro and took his prisoners back with him in the evening.

Bobcaygeon, June 15.—The fishing season opened on Friday the 16th, with a good number of tourists on hand to try their hand at the old game, but whether the season has become a little farther advanced, allowing the fish to get off their spawning beds into deep water, or that they do not care to be seen, biting at such common bait as a silver spoon, a phantom minnow or a live worm, which the boys have been hunting and hoarding up so zealously the past few nights, it is quite apparent so far that the "catch" has not been as good as in recent years. However, fishing is a game which the old tars don't give up at one day's trial, but as a fascination like the proverbial ractack betting of "better luck next time," so we may expect before the season ends of faithfulness having its reward.

The weather of the past week has been all that could be desired and prospects are for a bountiful harvest.

The Str. Lilloutt, of Lakefield, with Capt. Chas. Gray in charge, is now making her regular daily trips between here and Storey Lake, calling here at about 12.30 p.m., returning at 1.30. This gives the traveling public splendid accommodation of connecting with the C.P.R., arriving here at 12.10 p.m. with the lower lakes and vice versa.

Everlasting Memorials

Head Lake, June 15.—The friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. H. Southern gathered at his home on Monday evening last with well filled baskets and completely surprised him by presenting him with a writing desk and purse of money as a token of their appreciation of his work while among them. The following address being read:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Southern—Your many friends of Head Lake feel that we cannot let the time of your departure from our midst pass without taking recognition of the active and helpful services you have rendered during the years you have been associated with us. We have been looking forward regretfully to the hour that would terminate your connection with us, but until we have fully realized the loss we sustain. For many years, through all their various changes, you have been among us, and your joyous manner and genial disposition have won for you a very warm place in our hearts. We cannot therefore allow this last opportunity to pass without giving expression of our appreciation of the help you have given to us and we assure you whenever you return you will find an open door and a hearty welcome with the people of Head Lake. New friendships you will meet, new friendships will be formed, new interests will occupy your mind and attention, but we sometimes hope you will think of the old friends you leave behind. We send our best wishes to Mrs. Southern and little Winston and we trust you to accept these tokens of our appreciation, not for their intrinsic worth but because they give us an expression to our love and pleasure. We wish you a safe and pleasant journey and hope that your journey will be blessed with happiness and prosperity.

(Signed on behalf of your friends) Lake friends.)

A very suitable reply was made by Mr. Southern, thanking his friends for their kindness and expressing his deep regret on leaving his old birthplace and friends, and making his sincere hopes that they were not permitted to meet again on earth their aim would be to meet in a better world.

The inquest on the death of James Madill, killed in the International Limited train wreck, opened at Peterboro, Tuesday, June 13, at 10 o'clock. Rev. A. M. Irwin is the officiating clergyman.

Col. Fred White, comptroller of the N. W. Mounted Police, is to be superannuated after 45 years of service.
