THE RING FINGER.

The following extract from an article on "Wedding Ceremonies" in the June Canadian Home Journal, is of interest: "After all this attention to the detail of wedding etiquette may we just turn for a moment to the romantic side of a little custom? It concerns the custom of placing the wedding ring on the third finger. One explanation is that an old superstition connected the third finger with the heart by an artery.

A BAD ACCIDENT.

The home of Mr. Seth Dean, a prosperous farmer near Burketon, was the scene of a sad accident this week. Cecil, the youngest son, was out horseback riding, when the horse became unmanageable and after running for some distance the animal threw the little fellow to the ground, tramping on his body, and, as if in an evident desire that the little fellow should not escape, the brute planted one of its forefeet on the back of the boy's neck, pressing his head and face down into the sand.

PETER McARTHUR ON SPRAYING

Importance of Work Realized When you see it Done

Mr. Clement, of Dutton, the agricultural representative from Elgin county, recently paid a visit to the farm of Peter McArthur at Appin, to advise with that writer-horticulturist about spraying methods.

At last I am beginning to understand the theory of spraying. Of course, I had read all about it, and had listened to Mr. Clement's explanations, and, though everything seemed reasonable, the real purpose of the work did not rightly get across to me until to-day. One has to go through the work to fully understand its significance. I find that among many people the idea prevails that the three different sprayings are given so as to do the work thoroughly, and the result is that many have the impression that missing one application doesn't matter much. I now see that this attitude is entirely wrong. Each spraying is done for a perfectly distinct purpose. The first spraying is meant to kill the oyster-shell bark-louse, fungus, and things that weaken the vitality of the trees. Its purpose is to act as a tonic that will enable the tree to begin the season strong and healthy.
