NO HURRY IN MEXICO.

A Place For Resting and Missing Trains Without a Pang.

"Speaking of the high tension of modern life," said a New Orleans man of affairs, "I am reminded of a little incident that occurred during a visit I paid to Mexico City several years ago. I had depot considerably before the time adverno chances on missing it. As it happen- joyed by both officers and men. ed, however, it was half an hour late in the moving car. It was as close a connec- bonds. tion as I ever saw in my life, and the amazing imperturbability of the chap piqued my curiosity. "'Pardon me,' said I, after making some pretext for conversation, 'but were you aware that this train was due to leave half an hour ago?' 'Certainly,' he replied. 'Then how in the world,' I asked, 'did you happen to strike such a leisurely gait in coming to the depot?' 'Well, I've quit hurrying since I came here,' he answered smilingly. 'You see, I used to be a broker in Chicago, with a home in the suburbs, and I spent 18 years of my life running to trains. I begrudged every minute I lost from business, and if I got there 30 seconds too soon my conscience reproached me for squandering valuable time. Of course I eventually broke down, as most of 'em do sooner or later, and the doctor gave me a choice of complete rest in California or complete rest in the cem-

"'I chose California and was just beginning to find out what a good thing life really was when some fool friends temptin two months I was on my back again. That time the doctor used language. He drew a little picture of physical and mental wreckage that made my hair bristle on my head, and then and there I swore off on all forms of hurry. move on myself.' "'But suppose you had missed the train today,' I suggested. 'I would have gone tomorrow,' he replied calmly, 'or perhaps not at all. Why, my dear sir,' he said earnestly, 'missing trains with out a pang is an exquisite pleasure to man who has chased 'em for 18 sol years! Trains are emblematic of all that is headlong and breathless in modern life and to grin at the rear platform as moves away and say, "G'long with you I don't care a cuss!" is one of the sweet est joys I know. I love to miss trains.' "I often think of that happy exile," said the speaker, sighing. "I believe he has solved the problem of life."

Naming the Pudding.

Kate's place was in the dining room, says the Worcester Gazette, speaking of a "model servant." She was not the cook, but she had a fine talent for desserts and often went into the kitchen to make up some special dainty.

So it happened that when the mistress had a clerical dinner, with the bishop and two or three other churchmen, Kate the author of the pudding. She praised the dish and the other clergymen echoed his opinion, but she masked her enjoyment of the situation behind the solemn face which she always wore when waiting on the table. "Pray tell me," said the bishop, "what is the name of this wonderful pudding?" "I really don't know," said the mistress. "What is the name of it, Kate?" Kate, very proud of the importance bestowed upon her, but with features unmoved, said: "Well, ma'am, to tell ye the truth, I've been so busy today that I hadn't time to name it. But, sure, with so many of the reverend clergy here this evening, it'll not be long before 'tis chris-

HOT FRESH BREAD.

It Is Very Nice, but It Will Make You

a Chronic Dyspeptic. Perhaps the least understood of human maladies is dyspepsia. Turn to one standard lexicon and you will find this: "Dyspepsia-See Indigestion." Turn to another and you will see this: "Indigestion-See Dyspepsia." Read all you can find on both subjects and all you will know may be set down thus: Dyspepsia is indigestion and indigestion is dyspepsia. Bread is said to be the staff of life. Possibly that is true. Bread fresh made is responsible for all the indigestion and dyspepsia. Eat it hot and be a chronic invalid. Everybody in the south was dyspeptic until northern bakers settled there after the war and made bread that was eaten cold. Talk about your "beat biscuit" and your "soda wz" rolls, your hot pone and your Sunday loaf heated over Mrs. Potter Palmer has organized an to melt butter. It sounds old fashioned admirable service to give information to and aristocratic, maybe, but it is death

Bill Scott, the coal baron of Erie, watched a young man eat one day and remarked, "I'd give $1,000,000 for your stomach." He knew nothing about the youth's stomach, for one cannot judge by the appetite. As a matter of fact, this hearty eater was a martyr to dyspepsia, and his abnormal capacity for food was but the outward evidence of his trouble. He and Scott had the same malady, but in a different form. The millionaire could not eat at all without the severest pains. He spent many thousands of dollars for medicinal help and medical advice and died of starvation and gastritis. If he had never eaten bread, it is probable that he never would have known dyspepsia. Prevention of the national disorder may

If you are bound to eat bread, eat matzos. They are made of the purest flour that can be had, and they contain no leaven. If you are bent upon eating bakers' bread, either loaves or rolls, let it remain in the bread box a week or ten days until decomposition or fermentation has done its work of purification; then soak in cold water a minute or two and heat in the oven until quite dry and light. Who eats beef killed last night for today's breakfast? Who has roasted for dinner an aged hen killed in the forenoon? The cannibal. Who drinks beer the day it is brewed or whisky the day it is distilled? Who wants champagne a week old? We must learn that fresh bread is unripe or unseasoned bread. Time must be given for the processes of nature to render it digestible.

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS.

Some Sound Advice a Westerner Once Got After a Row.

"Mind your own business is a good rule to go by," said a veteran westerner with an ugly scar between his thumb and his index finger, "and this mark you see on my hand keeps me in mind of it. "I thought I had seen a 'guerrilla,' one of those chaps around a game who are watching to catch a sleeper, slip the checks, and knowing that somebody would be killed if the two men went outside, I put my hand on my friend's shoulder and announced that the guerrilla had struck me in the jaw and I went over, but was right up again, and he came for me with a big knife. "As it turned out, I was right, and my friend and the little man shook hands. We got the $20 from the guerrilla and that same night the boys wrecked his cabin and drove him out of the camp."

The Spirit Mediums.

The Occasional Visitor-I have noted that these clever spirit mediums who can make chairs and miscellaneous furniture dance a hornpipe always call in a very material drayman when they want to move the piano.

The Artist-You recollect the Frenchman who asked an Irish medium to produce the spirit of Voltaire? Voltaire came forth, much to his admirer's delight. It was Voltaire complete in every detail. The Frenchman began an animated conversation in their native tongue. The shade did not respond. At last the Frenchman grew exasperated and turned to the medium.

"Not can ze great Voltaire converse?" "Of course he can, ye heathen, if ye will stop that furrin lingo and talk good English. Do ye take him for a frog eater?" - Rounseville Wildman's "As Talked In the Sanctum."

Just the Point.

Freddy does not often have an idea, but when he does he sticks to it tenaciously. For instance, he came out with this conundrum the other day with a glow of self conscious pride: "Why is an eagle like a man?"

Everybody gave it up, when Freddy exclaimed with a chuckle: "Because it is baldheaded."

"But," said somebody, "all eagles are not baldheaded." "That's just it," responded Freddy. "Neither are all men baldheaded."
