TOO BAD FOR OTHER CITIES THEY LOCATE IN SEATTLE

Mr. Chas. Sutherland Writes an Interesting Letter About the Pacific City

A VERY WICKED PLACE But it is prospering in Business and has Bright Prospects—Its Morals Will Improve

Mr. Charles Sutherland is engaged on a steamer between Seattle and the Yukon. The following letter about the former place may be of interest:

Back about the fifties a young man from Western Canada went west. He prospered and finally developed into a railroad magnate. He saw the advantages to be gained in time and transportation facilities by a northern railroad connecting St. Paul with the Pacific coast. He tried to gain an entrance into Tacoma, Wash., a splendidly situated city on the Puget Sound. The Northern Pacific had already run a line there and naturally the magnate and the N. P. backed each other. At last nothing stood in his way except the purchase of a right of way and the Indian reservation near Tacoma. Finally the time was near for the agreement of purchase, when suddenly it was announced that the Indian had met a sudden death, and with that incident Tacoma was abandoned for the time being and the road run to Seattle on the other side of the Sound. A well equipped road was run across the plains, through the mountains and over Washington state to Everett, then Seattle. There were fast trains and electric lighted cars and the influence and money of a great and shrewd corporation was turned to the development of the northern portions of Minnesota, Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Washington. Settlers were brought in and new industries sprung up.

But they did not stop there. Seattle by the Great Northern (the name of the road) is many miles nearer Chicago and many of the other great distributing points east than San Francisco. Trading with the Orient successfully depends largely on speedy transportation; hence the magnate had big freight boats built, the largest exclusive freighters in the world. Trade kept coming to Seattle, and in time grew to be a great city. The name of the magnate is Jim Hill. It is a name to conjure with in the west. And to Jim Hill, and her favorable situation in relation to the Oriental and Alaskan trade, and to the immense lumbering operations in Washington, Seattle owes the fact that she is today one of the finest Pacific coast cities, not only in the Pacific coast but in the whole union. The population has increased more rapidly than that of any other with the exception of one, in America.

A WICKED PLACE

It is a unique place in many ways. It is a distinct product of the fervent, nervous onrush of western civilization. The veteran of the plains is here. He no longer carries his gun in his belt; but his fearlessness and courage and resourceful characteristics that stood him in such good stead in the days when he crossed the plains on his trusty steed are of immense advantage to him in the no less exciting life of making money. And right here let it be said the western states are stamped ground for the grafters, stamping ground for the grafters, and Seattle is the queen city of graft and grafters. At Butte, Montana, you are against it pretty hard, but after crossing the cascades you abandon all hope, and at Seattle your only hope is to turn grafter and graft on the other grafters. The old Californian miners, who have survived the strenuous times of '49 are here. The Klondiker, the surplus of the rush of '97 is here, successful and unsuccessful planning and scheming new investments or to recuperate lost fortunes. The southerner has forgotten his leisurely ways and is on the move in Seattle. On the streets you hear the drawl of the Virginian and the "you've got to shun me" of the man from Missouri. The Chicago man is running at large, building big apartment houses, putting up large office buildings and engineering large real estate deals than ever. Every state in the union has sent her contingent good, bad and indifferent. Of thugs, thieves, dope peddlers, prostitutes, gamblers, "hold-up" men, "sure-thing" boys, and "get quick rich men," Seattle has her share and more, as for years she

However, the woods are full of officials and land companies, who can give the anxious homesteader far more information than I could—that being their business.

HOMESTEADS ARE REMOTE

To the ordinary land purchaser, with moderate capital, Manitoba holds very little inducement, as it does not do any business in the main. The best land to be had in the west is east of the Moosejaw district. Land sells all along the line at from $20 to $60 an acre. There is some land available at low rates on the new Kinkella branch in the Pleasant Hills region, but it is light and undesirable. The same might be said of most of the land on the Soo line between Moosejaw and Portal. The price of which is steadily increasing. I would strongly advise prospective settlers to locate on the Saskatchewan Valley, which is reached by the Prince Albert branch of the C. P. R. running from Regina to Prince Albert. This region from Craik to Prince Albert, especially north of Saskatoon is the loveliest thing in the land line that I have seen in the west. It is slightly rolling, well-watered and, for the most part, fine black loam, and the country inland is better than that seen along the line. The Rosthern district and the Carrot River country east of Rosthern probably offer the best land on the western market to-day. As well as having such excellent natural advantages it will soon be traversed by the Canadian Northern railway, (which is now being graded), and will in the near future doubtless be literally covered with branches of the rival roads, as Southern Manitoba is now. Land can be purchased in this region at from $6 to $12 per acre, with easy terms, but I cannot say how long this will last. The Territorial Land Company, is the largest land-dealing concern in that region, and holds an immense tract along the C.N.R. lately purchased from that concern, as no doubt most of my readers are aware.

If I remember right Mr. Allan Adamson, of Rosthern, is the representative of that company with office at Rosthern, and I would urge all who desire to purchase land to write him.

I say nothing about the district west of Moosejaw, nor the Edmonton district, because the former is best adapted for ranching, and the latter has not yet been opened up sufficiently to tempt much settlement. Its time is coming, when the unoccupied lands in the eastern part of the territories is settled.

In conclusion I may say that it is simply wonderful how prices in land are climbing. A young fellow of my acquaintance bought land in Manitoba four years ago at $4 and sold it three weeks ago for $11, clearing a modest fortune. Land at Moosejaw, which five years ago sold for $7, is now selling at $35. The school land adjacent to Saskatoon sold lately at $107 per acre, with the excellent crop that is assured this year there is every prospect of an unprecedented rush next year to the land of the boundless prairie.

Next week I would like to give my old Victoria county friends, through the Watchman-Warder, a short account of my trip from Manitoba to Oregon.

A WOMAN SHOT A BURGLAR IN HER STORE AT AURORA Then Her Husband Opened Fire and the Intruder was Hit Three Times

A despatch from Aurora, dated Thursday last to the Toronto World says: Aurora, the scene of the operations of the notorious Rice-Rutledge gang, has for the past two weeks been the stamping ground of another gang of crooks, and with such marked success that many of the residents of the peaceful town have been walking the streets at night, armed to the teeth in some cases, on the lookout for suspicious characters and gentlemen of burglaristic propensities. With exasperating regularity, though the members of the fraternity have been playing their trade, and with such good success that not till this morning has one of them been caught. About 4 a.m. to-day, William Galt, and the glory of the first capture belongs to a woman.

At present I am making a second trip to Alaska, and if acceptable will give in my next letter a short account of a trip to this wonderful country with its thousands of miles of dreamy waste, its mighty mountains and its tales of romance of the twentieth century that equal in imagery anything to be found in your novels of bold heroes and love-sick maidens. Yours faithfully, CHAS. SUTHERLAND.

Warne, who kept a grocery on Wellington-st., was arrested by hearing a noise, evidently emanating from the store below the room. Rousing his wife, they proceeded to investigate. First arming themselves with revolvers, the couple tip-toed down the stairs to the store entrance and entered the main part of the shop in the semi-darkness.

Mr. Warne led the way and proceeded to the back of the shop and behind the counter. Mrs. Warne, after taking a hasty look behind the refrigerator, decided to let the blind of the hall window up to get more light. She then discovered the intruder. He was crouching behind the door leading from the store to the hallway. Without more ado, she fired point blank. She fired at such close range that powder marks are to be seen on the man's face, around the bullet wound. The story is best told in her own words.

"We came down stairs quietly," said Mrs. Warne, "but the creaking of the stairs must have warned the fellow, for as we entered the shop we could see no one. Mr. Warne looked over the back of the store and was down behind the counter when I said: 'I guess we're too late, Daddy.' I turned with that to go out into the hallway, when just behind the door, not three feet away, I saw some clothing. Waiting for no more, I let go, firing directly at the clothing, and a yell followed the shot immediately. I was fearfully nervous while on the hunt for the man, but as soon as I caught sight of the figure behind the door, I was angry and I shot.

"Yes, I'm used to firearms, and I am not considered a poor shot by any means," she continued. "The instant I fired, Mr. Warne also opened fire, discharging two or three shots, I am not sure which."

OPENED A FUSILADE

Mr. Warne corroborated his wife's statement in full. He said: "I fancy we caught sight of him at the same moment, for to my mind the first shots were at the same time. I fired, I think, three times. I was carrying my revolver above my head, and fired while bringing it to the level. This would account for the two bullets entering the man's shoulder and on a downward course. After the shooting I called on the man to come out and he said: 'I give up. I'm not armed, and I'm alone.' With that I told him to stay quiet and instructed my wife to keep guard over him while I got the constable.

Mr. Warne then went on to say that he went to the front door and called his neighbors, one of whom soon had the constable on the spot. While Mr. Warne was outside, the burglar walked to the counter and laid the proceeds of his thieving, amounting only to some few coppers, in a box. "There's your money, missus."

The burglar was taken to Toronto and lodged in jail. He is in a dangerous condition from the bullet wound in his chin.

DR. VROOMAN WILL STAND IF CHOSEN BY THE PARTY

But Will Support the Choice of the Convention—He Talks on Dominion Politics

In its last issue the Omeamee Mirror reports an interview with Dr. Vrooman, M.P., in which, at the outset, the doctor declares his belief that in the main the Gagey charges were true and gives reasons. The Mirror goes on as follows:

Dr. Vrooman then spoke of Dominion politics, with which he was more particularly connected. He dwelt upon the solidarity of the Conservative party, both in the House and throughout the country. Notwithstanding the great extent of the Dominion and the diverse interests of its provinces, the Conservative party, from its leaders down to the rank and file, are united as one man upon the great issues of the day. More than that, the best of feeling prevailed among all the leaders of the party. All were united too by a profound respect for their great leader in the House, Messrs. Borden and Monk. The doctor was very enthusiastic in his praise of these men. He spoke of their wide knowledge and consummate mastery of details, and above all their unimpeachable honesty and firmness of purpose. They were men who, no doubt, would see gladly the Conservative party restored to power and who sincerely believed that such a restoration would be for the best interest of the country; yet they would not swerve from their own convictions on the path of honest conviction to bring about such a result. There were worse things than being in opposition.

Laurier; he was an opportunist, first and always. Not by what great policy can the interest of Canada be best served; but by what plausible time-serving can the Liberals be kept in office, was always the first consideration with him and his ministry.

Naturally the redistribution bill came up for discussion. The doctor said it was impossible to discuss the merits of the bill as a whole, till the details were made public. These would not likely be known for some time yet, but from what had been disclosed, it was evident that Victoria, notwithstanding its large population, would henceforth have but the member. He regarded this as a great injustice to this county, but the Liberals felt they would gain at party advantage by giving it only as a one member. He regarded this as a great injustice to this county, but the doctor replied that it was not for him to say. The Liberals knew that by taking one member from Victoria they would decrease the Ontario Conservative majority in the house by one, and they hoped by causing a breach in the Conservative ranks, that they could elect a Liberal; thus making a gain of three on a division. Dr. Vrooman was sure that such a breach would not take place, and that no matter who was chosen, the party would give him a loyal support. The question for the Conservative electors to decide is, who is the strongest man in the county, and then having decided that to make a sure fire for victory.

If in the opinion of the party he is that man, he should be very glad indeed and would do every legitimate thing in his power to secure election; but if the party in their wisdom thought otherwise, that fact would never, even for a moment, to take any important step without first trying to find what the Conservative leaders thought of it. This was in keeping with the character of

WHERE ONE DAY'S BUSINESS EQUALS LINDSAY'S FOR SIX

Mr. Chas. McCaughey Writes of the Prosperity of the Northwest—The Best Part to Settle In

"What do you think of the west, where is the best place to locate?" So wrote a score of friends during the past year, while I was stationed at various points along the C.P.R. in the Canadian Northwest. All these queries were carefully laid away in the waste-paper basket, because in a C. P. R. office one works 24 hours a day, and any time he has after that he writes to his friends. "Six days shall thou labor and do nearly all thy work, and on the seventh thou shalt catch up." Such is the motto of the C. P. R. chief clerk.

However, my business taking me over the line a good deal, and my dealings with various parties interested in the west, made it possible for me to form, in some slight degree, opinions regarding the various parts of the great prairie region.

In the first place that which attracts the attention most in the west is the business congestion existing everywhere. More business is done in Regina or Moosejaw in one day than in Lindsay in a week. Everything is stamped "rush." Hotels are crowded, stores are full, land offices are busy, and banks are going full blast to-day, where yesterday a laundryman held forth. All this is quite normal, and lacks nothing of the fever and idleness which mark a boom. Land rises steadily, but never fluctuates and labor conditions are very healthy, with demand steadily increasing. The unfavorable condition is that in towns, rent, material, and the cost of living have risen out of proportion to wages, but this will soon be MANTOBA LAND DEAR

For the farmer who wants to homestead I have no advice. The available homesteads are far in from the line, and therefore difficult to estimate as to merit. The Battleford district has areas of excellent land, and is more likely to be tapped by a line of railway in the near future than any other I know of. Battleford is 90 miles from Saskatoon, the nearest railway point, which is the distributing station for that district. There are also sections as near as six or ten miles from various points on the C. P. R., but, Albert branch, it would be folly in my estimation, it would be folly for a man to take up land at any great distance from a railway, with out having good assurance that this condition would be improved in the near future. Therefore if land is not available right on the line, it is best to locate at some considerable distance from the existing line, thus standing a better chance of being on the route of future lines or branches.

A Brockville carter found 15 $5 bills lying on the top of a barrel and near by $1000 of the same denomination under a stairs near the back of a money parcel store. It is supposed to be part of the contents of a money parcel stolen in May from the express company.
