Ben was well before long he encountered one when least prepared to do so. One morning all the party except Ben, went out to see if they could find I some game, and he was left in charge; of the camp. He decided to surprise the mer with a partridge pie when they came back, and never thinking any more about the camp, the shoulhis way among the boulders in the direction where he expected to find the partridge. Suddenly a flock of partridge arose in the air in front of him with a whirring sound which was immediately followed by the bang of Ben's rifle. No sooner had the report died away than a louder crashing was heard behind and Ben time to see a large grizzly charging forward. Ben was so greatly taken was to run. He started to run down the slope, but stumbled and fell and at last dropped his gun and put forth all his efforts in running. The bear came on at a lumbering pace. but Pen managed to dodge around some We carved not a line, we raised not trees and rocks and at length scramble onto a big boulder eleven or twelve feet high. The grizzly, now med with rage, was just behind Ben when he scrambled onto the boulder. and with one swipe of his monstrous paw he tore Ben's pant leg to tatters. On the top of this boulder Ben lay panting for at least fifteen minutes. The bear flung itself against the boulder and it began to rock but always Ben managed to get on the opposite side and keep it steady. Ben and the grizzly were now play- One of the Worst Cases on Record

The top of the boulder was sufficiently raged beast would be thus baffled he tired of the game, and he now look-He stood upon the boulder and as he looked down he shuddered at the thought of the death he should meet if the boulder was to give away. At last the bear gave one mighty roar and threw himself against the boulder. Ben felt himself being whirled through the air. He heard the boulder crashing down the slope as he lit in some bushes, but picking himself up found that no bones were broken. Looking up the hill he saw the bear in his death agonies. The boulder had rolled over him. Going back to camp Ben was just in time for supper, and that evening with the men gathered around the camp fire, he told them of his first encounter with a bear.
